ADDISON—Str Roger de Coverley Papers—ABBOTT
ADDISON AND STEELE—Selections from The Tatler and The Spectator—ABBOTT
ÆNEID OF VIRGIL—ALLINSON
AUSTEN—Pride and Prejudice
BROWNING—Selected Poems—REYNOLDS
BUILDERS OF DEMOCRACY—GREENLAW
BUNYAN—The Pilgrim's Progress—LATHAM
BURKE—Speech on Conciliation with Collateral Readings—WARD,
BURNS—Selected Poems and CARLYLE—Essay on Burns—MARSH
CHAUCER—Selections—GREENLAW
COLERIDGE—The Ancient Mariner
LOWELL—Vision of Sir Launfal
COOPER—The Last of the Mohicans—LEWIS
COOPER—The Spy—DAMON
DANA—Two Years Before the Mast—WESTCOTT
DEFOE—Robinson Crusoe—HASTINGS
Democracy Today—GAUSS
DE QUINCEY—Joan of Arc and Selections—MOODY
DE QUINCEY—The Flight of a Tartar Tribe—FRENCH.
DICKENS—A Christmas Carol, etc.—BROADUS
DICKENS—A Tale of Two Cities—BALDWIN
DICKENS—David Copperfield—BALDWIN
DRYDEN—Palamon and Arcite—COOK
EMERSON—Essays and Addresses—HEYDRICK
English Poems—From Pope, Gray, Goldsmith, Coleridge, Byron,
MACAULAY, ARNOLD, and others—SCUDDER
English Popular Ballads—HART
Essays—ENGLISH AND AMERICAN—ALDEN
Familiar Letters—GREENLAW
FRANKLIN—Autobiography—GRIFFIN
French Short Stories—SCHWEIKERT
GASKELL (Mrs.)—Cranford—HANCOCK
GEORGE ELIOT—Silas Marner—HANCOCK
GEORGE ELIOT—The Mill on the Floss—WARD
GOLDSMITH—The Vicar of Wakefield—MORTON
HAWTHORNE—The House of the Seven Gables—HERRICK
HAWTHORNE—Twice-Told Tales—HERRICK AND BRUERE
HUGHES—Tom Brown's School Days—DE MILLE
IRVING—Life of Goldsmith—KRAPP
IRVING—The Sketch Book—KRAPP
IRVING—Tales of a Traveller—and parts of The Sketch Book—KRAPP
LAMB—Essays of Elia—BENEDICT
LONGFELLOW—Narrative Poems—POWELL
LOWELL—Vision of Sir Launfal—See Coleridge
MACAULAY—Essays on Addison and Johnson—NEWCOMER
MACAULAY—Essays on Clive and Hastings—NEWCOMER.
MACAULAY—Goldsmith, Frederic the Great, Madame D’Arblay—NEWCOMER
MACAULAY—Essays on Milton and Addison—NEWCOMER
MILTON—L’Allegro, II Penseroso, Comus, and Lycidas—NEILSON
MILTON—Paradise Lost, Books I and II—FARLEY
Old Testament Narratives—RHODES
One Hundred Narrative Poems—TETER
PALGRAVE—Golden Treasury—NEWCOMER
PARKMAN—The Oregon Trail—MACDONALD
POE—Poems and Tales, Selected—NEWCOMER
POPE—Homer's Iliad, Books I, VI, XXII, XXIV—CRESSY AND MOODY
READE—The Cloister and The Hearth—DE MILLE
RUSKIN—Sesame and Lilies—LINN
Russian Short Stories—SCHWEIKERT
SCOTT—Iranhoe—SIMONDS
SCOTT—Quentin Durward—SIMONDS
SCOTT—Lady of the Lake—MOODY
SCOTT—Lay of the Last Minstrel—MOODY AND WILLARD
SCOTT—Marmion—MOODY AND WILLARD
SHAKESPERE—The Neilson Edition—Edited by W. A. NEILSON,

As You Like It Macbeth
Hamlet Midsummer-Night's Dream
Henry V Romeo and Juliet
Julius Caesar The Tempest

Twelfth Night

SHAKESPERE—Merchant of Venice—LOVETT
SOUTHEY—Life of Nelson—WESTCOTT
STEVENSON—Inland Voyage and Travels with a Donkey—LEONARD
STEVENSON—Kidnapped—LEONARD
STEVENSON—Treasure Island—BROADUS
TENNYSON—Selected Poems—REYNOLDS
TENNYSON—The Princess—COPELAND
THOREAU—Walden—BOWMAN
THACKERAY—Henry Esmond—PHELPS
THACKERAY—English Humorists—CUNLIFFE AND WATT
Three American Poems—The Raven, Snow-Bound, Miles Standish—GREEVER
Types of the Short Story—HEYDRICK
Washington, Webster, Lincoln—DENNEY

SCOTT, FORESMAN AND COMPANY
CHICAGO: 623 S. Wabash Ave. NEW YORK: 8 East 34th Street
PREFACE

The editors of this volume wish to acknowledge their indebtedness to Mr. S. E. Dawson's Study of The Princess, to the memoir of "Alfred, Lord Tennyson" by his son, and to the editions of The Princess by Doctor William J. Rolfe, Professor G. E. Woodberry, and Mr. Henry W. Boynton.

For further criticism of The Princess and of Tennyson's work in general, students are referred to Tennyson, by the Reverend Stopford Brooke; Literary Studies, by Mr. Joseph Jacobs; Corrected Impressions, by Professor Saintsbury; Victorian Poets, by Mr. E. C. Stedman; The Poetry of Tennyson, by Mr. Henry Van Dyke; and Alfred, Lord Tennyson, by Mr. Arthur Waugh.
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tennyson</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Princess</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Text</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chronological Table</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Versification</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Notes</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Helps to Study</td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theme Subjects</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Selections for Class Reading</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INTRODUCTION

TENNYSON

"Half-way between Horncastle and Spilsby," writes the present Lord Tennyson—"in a land of quiet villages, large fields, gray hillsides and noble tall-towered churches, on the lower slope of a Lincolnshire wold, the pastoral hamlet of Somersby nestles, embosomed in trees. Here, on the 6th of August, 1809, was born, in his father's rectory, Alfred Tennyson. He was the fourth of twelve children, eight sons and four daughters, most of them more or less true poets, and of whom all except two have lived to 70 and upward."

The rectory, within and without, held a great place in the poet's imagination through his whole life. Garden, orchard, lawn, and brook,—all are celebrated directly or indirectly in his verse. "Flow down, cold rivulet, to the sea" (but not, as many persons have supposed, The Brook), was suggested by the Somersby stream.

County, as well as village and parish, gave Tennyson many pictures, though these he almost always generalized. The "moated grange," for a good example, which has so often been taken to be a red-brick farm-house near the Rectory, is "an imaginary house in the fen." The fens and the wolds, however, the hills and rich fields, and many a church-towered landscape, lived in the memory and the verse of this native of Lincolnshire, to whom the sea, also, was oftenest the North Sea. The shire, indeed, however long Tennyson was a stranger to it in the flesh, was seldom absent from his spirit, and he did for the quiet expanses of Mid-Lincolnshire and the ocean that beats upon its low shore, what Scott did for the Highlands, Wordsworth for the English Lake Country, and Virgil for Mantua.

The passion for poetry, as well as the passion for nature, awoke early in Tennyson. So early, that the most vivid incident recorded of his boyhood is his carving on a rock, when, in April, 1824, he heard of Byron’s death, the words, “Byron is dead.”

Remarkable in mind, the boy was not less remarkable in body. The description in The Grandmother was used of him:

> “Here’s a leg for a babe of a week!” says doctor; and he would be bound,
> There was not his like that year in twenty parishes round.

And his son says, writing of his young manhood:—“Not only was my father fond of walking, but of ‘putting the stone’ and other athletic feats. Mrs. Lloyd of Louth writes: ‘In proof of his strong muscular power, when showing us a little pet pony on the lawn at Somersby one day he surprised us by taking it up and carrying it.' Brookfield remarked: 'It is not fair, Alfred, that you should be Hercules as well as Apollo.' Fitzgerald notes: 'Alfred could hurl the crowbar further than any of the neighbouring clowns, whose humours, as well as those of their betters, knight, squire, landlord, and lieutenant, he took quiet note of, like Chaucer himself.'

So much for Hercules. The youth's first notable offering to Apollo was Poems, Chiefly Lyricai, published in 1830, when he had been two years at the University of Cambridge. This tiny volume, if it contained few or no new ideas, was full of a strange new music, which was developed and more definitely sounded in the far more important collection of 1832. The slow, dream-like movement with which the world has been familiar in so much of Tennyson's verse for sixty years and over, is, in varying measures, the movement of The Lotos Eaters, The Lady of Shalott, Genone, The Palace of Art, and A Dream of Fair Women.

In the year before the publication of this volume, Tennyson had left Cambridge without taking his degree. Among his closest friends at the University were Richard Monckton Milnes, afterward Lord Houghton; Trench, who became Archbishop of Dublin; Thompson, who was so widely known later as Master of Trinity; and, above all—though this nearest friend was two years younger—Arthur Hallam.
The death of Hallam in 1833 touched Tennyson's genius and spirit to higher potency, and from that time his work showed a deeper sympathy with human thought, grief, and aspiration. The larger sense of life, however, had no early opportunity to reveal itself to English readers in general, for as the professional critics were almost unanimously adverse to the 1832 volume, Tennyson subjected himself to a silent and severe apprenticeship for another ten years. Much work, much solitude in London lodgings, were cheered by the frequent companionship of old Cambridge friends, and of new friends also,—among them Mill, Landor, Thackeray, and Carlyle.

Immeasurably the best descriptions of Tennyson are two from the pen of Carlyle, who was portrait-painter-in-chief to his contemporaries. One of these he sketched for his brother John. The other, more vivid still, is to be found in a letter to Emerson:—"One of the finest looking men in the world. A great shock of rough dusky dark hair; bright, laughing, hazel eyes; massive aquiline face, most massive yet most delicate; of sallow brown complexion, almost Indian looking, clothes cynically loose, free-and-easy, smokes infinite tobacco. His voice is musical, metallic, fit for loud laughter and piercing wail, and all that may lie between; speech and speculation free and plenteous. I do not meet in these late decades such company over a pipe!"
As an illustration of the abundance in Tennyson of what may be called merely human force and qualities—in distinction from his eminence as poet or thinker—it is well to remember the saying of Edward Fitzgerald, that Tennyson, Thackeray, and a certain sea-captain, were "the three greatest men" he had ever known.

In 1842 came the publication of Poems by Alfred Tennyson, in two volumes. The first was made up chiefly of previously issued pieces, some of them almost rewritten: the second was almost entirely new. In striking contrast to the reception of some of these very verses ten years before, the literary world, now trained by Tennyson into a Tennyson public, hastened to welcome the two volumes, which included Ulysses, the Morte d'Arthur, St. Simeon Stylites, Dora, Locksley Hall, A Vision of Sin, The Two Voices, and that perfect song, Break, Break, Break. "Ulysses," Tennyson said to his son, "was written soon after Arthur Hallam's death, and gave my feeling about the need of going forward, and braving the struggle of life, perhaps more simply than anything in In Memoriam."

Within the next few years several new editions of the Poems testified to Tennyson's growing popularity. In 1845, through Sir Robert Peel, then prime minister, came a pension from the crown of two hundred pounds a year. In 1847 appeared The Princess, the earliest of the poet's longer works. The year 1850 stands as annus mirabilis in his life, for within the twelve-month In Memoriam—which had been twenty years in writing—was given to the world; Tennyson was appointed Poet Laureate; and he married Emily Sellwood, a beautiful and accomplished woman.

In Memoriam records the bitter grief and the final resignation of an individual soul. As the expression of impassioned friendship, it greatly surpasses anything in English literature since Shakspere's sonnets, and among modern elegies in our language only Lycidas and Adonais are worthy to be put beside it. But In Memoriam is something more, at all events something other, than the celebration of a noble and tender friendship, than "a testament of noble-ending love." What a political upheaval is to a nation, the death of Arthur Hallam was to Tennyson, and this revolution in his state of man changed him from a melodious dreamer, a singer of exquisite music, into a sad and thoughtful man, whose function it was to interpret to itself the time in which he lived. The student of Tennyson will find, I think, that after the death of Hallam his most important work seldom failed to give back a poetic reflection of the intellectual, moral and religious thinking of the age. Locksley Hall is a kind of English Carmen Seculare: In Memoriam, inspired by a personal sorrow which it everywhere utters, is also a meditation upon the immortality of the soul—an impartment of faith and doubt and hope.

Tennyson's first official poem was the Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, in 1852. In 1854, The Charge of the Light Brigade trumpeted its way through the world. Maud was published in 1855. This poem, if not Tennyson's favorite, was the one among all his works that he was fondest of reading—chanting, rather—to his friends. The public has not shared his predilection, although the poem has had no lack of delighted readers. Most men are inclined to believe, in spite of the poet, that so tremulous an egotist as the hero could not have made a good soldier, and to wonder how Maud could have been in love with him. The technical objection holds against Maud that, notwithstanding its many beautiful details and unusual variety of rhythm, a too constant intensity makes the "monodrama" a monotone. But we must not be ungrateful for those enchanting passages, which, once read, can never be forgotten. The love song beginning is full of dramatic significance at the point where it occurs, and is memorable even among Tennyson's songs for its charm of first love. Even in so brief an enumeration of notable works place must be found for the few lines out of which the whole poem grew—like Browning's Saul from two verses of the Bible:—

Birds in the high Hall-garden.

> O that 'twere possible,
> After long grief and pain,
> To find the arms of my true love
> Round me once again!

The nocturne,

> Come into the garden, Maud,

has in it the soul of all gardens, just as in Tennyson's early song,

> A spirit haunts the year's last hours,

walks the ghost of all gardens.

In 1859 appeared the first group of the epic series called Idylls of the King,—Tennyson's longest work. Enid, Vivien, Elaine, and Guinevere, were followed in 1869 by The Coming of Arthur, The Holy Grail, Pelleas and Ettarre and The Passing of Arthur. The year 1872 yielded Gareth and Lynette and The Last Tournament; Tiresias and Other Poems, published in 1885, contained Balin and Balan. The division of Enid into The Marriage of Geraint and Geraint and Enid, gives the epic its final form of twelve idylls. Each idyll revives and modernizes an ancient legend of King Arthur. Each is independent enough to be read alone with understanding, but through them all is woven the threefold love-story of Arthur, Guinevere, and Lancelot. Although the Idylls are not allegories—indeed, the human interest of the sequence is direct and engrossing—the tenor of the whole work is to show the war of Spirit against Flesh in a world where Sense has many helpers. In spite of frequent over-elaboration on Tennyson's part, and the inevitable feeling of the reader that King Arthur and his knights are moving in a nineteenth-century atmosphere, the noble theme of the Idylls is urged and illustrated in fluent, rich, blank verse, which, in Guinevere and The Passing of Arthur especially, often rivals the harmonies of the greatest masters of that characteristic English measure.

Between 1875 and 1892 appeared Queen Mary, Harold, The Cup, Becket, The Foresters, and three other dramas. These are of course poetic, but only fitfully dramatic; nor could even Irving's talent for acting or his genius for stage management commend to the public as acting plays these evidences that a great poet had been working in an unfriendly medium.

Volumes not yet mentioned were: Enoch Arden, published in 1864; The Lover's Tale, in 1879; Ballads, in 1880; Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, in 1886; and Demeter, in 1889. The Death of Oenone was brought out after Tennyson's death in 1892.

In 1883 the poet accepted an honor that he had before declined, and was raised to the peerage as Baron Tennyson of Aldworth and Farringford,—the title being taken from a house of his in Sussex and another in the Isle of Wight. On the sixth day of October, 1892, he slept his life away into death, after an extraordinarily long period of poetic production, and a career as quiet as that of so famous a man could well have been.

"The second period of English poetry in the nineteenth century," says Mr. Saintsbury, "displays a variety and abundance of poetical accomplishment which must rank it very little below either its immediate predecessor, or even the great so-called Elizabethan era. But it is distinguished from both these periods, and, indeed, from almost all others, by the extraordinary predominance of a single poet in excellence, in influence, and in duration. There is probably no other instance anywhere of a poet who for more than sixty years wrote better poetry than any one of his contemporaries who were not very old men when he began, and for exactly fifty of those years was recognized by the best judges as the chief poet of his country if not of his time." Some critics, dominated by the influence of Tennyson and charmed by his manifold excellence, have gone so far as to give him third place among English poets, and place him next to Shakspere and Milton. We shall rest, I think, in a judgment less clouded by contemporary prepossession, by freely admitting that Spenser and Shelley are greater poets than he. Wordsworth, also, surpasses him, if Wordsworth may stand with the small amount of his best work. Keats, too, if his marvelous promise may be taken as earnest of what he would have done in the years of performance that were denied him. Such hard-and-fast comparisons, however, are of little use except as checks upon unreasoning enthusiasm. What must not be forgotten is that no English poet save Tennyson was so long and so unfailingly an artist. Still more memorable is the fact that, through the last fifty of his sixty years of writing, he reflected the best thought of the age, and at the same time bettered the ideals of multitudes of English-speaking men and women.

THE PRINCESS

In the case of a work so celebrated and so much discussed as The Princess, persons who look at literature from the point of view of students will like to enquire what relation Tennyson's poem may have to the past, and how the same subject may have been treated by earlier writers. Naturally, the aspirations of women in the state were considered in Plato's Republic, and as naturally they were rather lightly considered. In English, Ascham and Milton touched upon the matter; but probably the first college for women proposed in detail was The Female Academy of Margaret Cavendish. Defoe proposed, with apparent sincerity, to found a college for women where they might study branches of learning "suitable to both their genius and their quality." "I need not enlarge," writes Defoe, in his Essay on Projects, "on the loss the defect of education is to women, nor argue the benefit of the contrary practice; it is a thing will be more easily granted than remedied. This chapter is not an essay at the thing, and I refer the practice to those happy days, if ever they shall be, when men shall be wise enough to mend it." Whatever Defoe's real feeling—and it is always safe to prefix the adjective apparent whenever we use the noun sincerity, of the great Trimmer of literature—Addison and Steele were well known as advocates of a better education for women, and Mary Wollstonecraft was its ardent partisan.

All these discussions, however, could have been but vague echoes in the ears of a poet of our own day. Two works only are likely to have furnished him anything,—Shakspere's Love's Labours Lost and Johnson's Rasselas. Johnson's Princess "desired first to learn all sciences, and then proposed to found a college of learned women in which she would preside, that, by conversing with the old and educating the young, she might divide her time between the acquisition and communication of wisdom, and raise up for the next age models of prudence and patterns of piety." But the Johnsonian heaven and the Johnsonian earth are not the Tennysonian. The Princess in Rasselas, though closely related to Miss Pinkerton of Chiswick and Miss Jenkyns of Cranford, is scarce cater-cousin to the Princess Ida.

At first sight, perhaps, Tennyson would seem to have been considerably indebted to Love’s Labours Lost. The scheme of the poem and that of the play are alike by contraries. Shakspere paints the retirement from the world, for study and meditation, of a king and three lords. Their sequestered course is to be for three years, during which they bind themselves not to look upon a woman. Then come a princess and her three ladies, who play parts similar to those of the invading men in The Princess. It is the opinion of Mr. Morton Luce,—who raises the question in his Handbook to Tennyson’s Works—that the passage quoted from Rasselas (he adds also Johnson’s statement: “‘The Princess thought that of all sublunary things knowledge was the best’”), taken “together with Love’s Labours Lost, supplies more than the foundation of Tennyson’s famous College.” Gama, the father of Ida, says, indeed,—“‘Knowledge, so my daughter held, was all in all.’” But Gama need not have looked to Dr. Johnson or to any other one person for his saying.

As to Love’s Labours Lost, the ground-plan of The Princess and no more, I am disposed to admit as Tennyson’s debt to Shakspere. In Shakspere the elements are differently mixed. Not only would the reversal of the parts have shut out any consideration of the education or the “rights” of women, but Shakspere's purpose was so far from discussing the education or rights of either sex, as evidently to have been a brilliant young intention of satirizing Lilly and the other euphuists. The doggerel, the introduction of sonnets as speeches, the extravagant alliteration, the crackling fire of quibble, quip, antithesis, and epigram—all these, with the odd grammatical forms and the antiphonal speeches of the characters in rhyming verse, are none the less parts of this satirical design because they are also, in less glaring degree, marks of Shakspere's own early style. In another way, quite as important, the nineteenth-century poem differs from the sixteenth-century play. The comic spirit breathes very lightly upon the King of Navarre, the Princess of France, and their attendants. Shakspere reserved his farce for Armado and the rest,—"the pedant, the braggart, the hedge priest, the fool, and the boy." The noble persons move with enchanting grace through a love story that is more than half a pageant or a masque. Tennyson, to be sure, retains Cupid, and conducts his arguments in the court of love. He, too, gives himself the aid of pageantry. Yet in the humorous treatment which is an essential part of the Medley he often burlesques—more often, one fancies, than he is always aware—both his argument and his love scenes. Even the masque, when the chorus of men is opposed to the chorus of Amazons, comes perilously near opéra bouffe.
Tennyson's debt to Rasselas, then, is slight. His real, though not burdensome obligation to Love's Labours Lost, it has become too much a matter of course to take too seriously.

The simple plot of The Princess is as follows: A Prince of the North, after being affianced as a child to a Princess of the South, has fallen in love with her portrait and a lock of her hair. When, however, the embassy appears to fetch home the bride, she sends back the message that she is not disposed to be married. Upon receipt of this word the Prince and two friends, Florian and Cyril, steal away to seek the Princess, and learn on reaching her father's court that she has established a Woman's College on a distant estate. Having got letters authorizing them to visit the Princess, they ride into her domain, where they determine to go dressed like girls and apply for admission as students in the College. They arrive in disguise, and are admitted. On the first day the young men enroll themselves as students of Lady Psyche, who recognizes Florian as her brother and agrees not to expose them, since—by a law of the College inscribed above the gates, which darkness has kept them from seeing—the penalty of their discovery would be death. Melissa, a student, overhears them, and is bound over to keep the secret. Lady Blanche, mother of Melissa and rival to Lady Psyche, also learns of the alarming invasion, and remains silent for sinister reasons of her own. On the second day the principal personages picnic in a wood. At dinner Cyril sings a song that is better fit for the smoking-room than for the ears of ladies; the Prince, in his anger, betrays his sex by a too masculine reproof; and dire confusion is the result. The Princess in her flight falls into the river, from which she is rescued by the Prince. Cyril and Lady Psyche escape together, but the Prince and Florian are brought before the Princess. At this important moment despatches are brought from her father saying that the Prince's father has surrounded her palace with soldiers, taken him prisoner, and holds him as a hostage. The Prince, after pleading to deaf ears, is sent away at dawn with Florian, and goes with him to the camp. Meantime during the night, the Princess's three brothers have come to her aid with an army. An agreement is reached to decide the case and end the war by a tournament between the brothers, with fifty men, on one side; the Prince and his two friends, with fifty men, on the other. This happens on the third day. The Prince and his men are vanquished, and he himself is badly wounded.

But the Princess is now gradually to discover that she has "overthrown more than her enemy," —that she has defeated yet saved herself. She has said of Lady Psyche's little child:

I took it for an hour in mine own bed
This morning: there the tender orphan hands
Felt at my heart, and seem'd to charm from thence
The wrath I nursed against the world.
When Cyril pleads with her to give the child back to its mother, she kisses it and feels that “her heart is barren.” When she passes near the wounded Prince, and is shown by his father—his beard wet with his son’s blood—her hair and picture on her lover’s heart,

Her iron will was broken in her mind,
Her noble heart was broken in her breast.

From the Princess’s cry then, “Grant me your son to nurse,” it is but a natural result that she should bring the Prince’s wounded men with him into the College, now a hospital. Through ministering to her lover, she comes to love him; and theories yield to “the lord of all.”

Throughout the piece, the imaginary poet who appears in the Prologue as the author represents himself as being divided between two parties in the audience. One party demands a burlesque; the other asks for the “true-heroic.” So, explains he,—

I moved as in a strange diagonal,
And maybe neither pleased myself nor them.

Mr. S. E. Dawson was the first to discover, or at all events the first to state—in a careful and minute “Study” of The Princess—the right line from which the diagonal diverges. In other words, Mr. Dawson points out that the unifying principle of the whole poem is the child Aglaia, daughter to Lady Psyche. "The babe," he says, "in the poem as in the songs, is made the central point upon which the plot turns; for the unconscious child is the concrete embodiment of Nature herself, clearing away all merely intellectual theories by her silent influence. Ida feels the power of the child. Whenever the plot thickens, the babe appears. It is with Ida upon her judgment seat. In the topmost height of the storm the wail of the 'lost lamb at her feet' reduces her eloquent anger into incoherence. She carries it when she sings her song of triumph. When she goes to tend her wounded brothers on the battlefield she carries it. Through it and for it Cyril pleads his successful suit, and wins it for the mother. For its sake the mother is pardoned."

In remembering the serious meaning of The Princess, of which the child is the symbol and central force, we must not forget that the work is—as it is entitled—a Medley, of which burlesque is a pervading element. The controlling serious force—the child—is outside of the plot, as I have briefly summarized it. The controlling burlesque force, on the other hand, is a highly important motive of the plot, and lies in the feminine masquerade of the Prince and his friends.

Tennyson himself said much that was of interest concerning The Princess to his son, who has published it in the Memoir, together with comment of his own, and other apposite information and criticism. Some of the facts were known before: others were there stated for the first time.

"The park round the [Lushingtons'] house is described in the Prologue to The Princess. . . . The subject of The Princess, my father believed, was original, and certainly the story is full of original incident, humour and fancy. It may have suggested itself when the project of a Women's College was in the air, or it may have arisen in its mock-heroic form from a Cambridge joke, such as he commemorated in these lines, which I found in one of his old MSS. books:

THE DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER.

Sweet Kitty Sandilands,
The daughter of the doctor,
We drest her in the Proctor's bands,
And past her for the Proctor.

All the men ran from her
That would have hasten'd to her,
All the men ran from her
That would have come to woo her.

Up the street we took her
As far as to the Castle,
Jauntily sat the Proctor's cap
And from it hung the tassel.

. . . His friends report my father to have said that the two great social questions impending in England were 'the housing and education of the poor man before making him our master, and the higher education of women;' and that the sooner woman finds out, before the great educational movement begins, that 'woman is not undevelop man, but diverse,’ the better it will be for the progress of the world. . . . It was no mere dramatic sentiment, but one of my father’s strongest convictions of the true relation between man and woman, which impelled him to write:

Let this proud watchword rest
Of equal; seeing either sex alone
Is half itself, and in true marriage lies
Nor equal nor unequal: each fulfils
Defect in each, and always thought in thought,
Purpose in purpose, will in will, they grow,
The single pure and perfect animal,
The two-cell’d heart beating, with one full stroke,
Life.

. . . After 1847 The Princess underwent considerable alterations. The second edition was published in 1848 with a few amendments, and dedicated to Henry Lushington, but in 1850 a third edition appeared with omissions and many additions, and notably six songs were introduced, which help to express more clearly the meaning of ‘the medley.’ These songs

The woman sang
Between the rougher voices of the men,
Like linnets in the pauses of the wind.

"In 1851 the ‘weird seizures’ of the Prince were inserted. His too emotional temperament was intended from an artistic point of view to emphasize his comparative want of power. ‘Moreover,’ my father writes, ‘the words “dream-shadow,” “were and were not,” doubtless refer to the anachronisms and improbabilities of the story. . . . It may be remarked that there is scarcely anything in the story which is not prophetically glanced at in the Prologue.’ My father added: ‘It is true that some of the blank verse in this poem is among the best I ever wrote.’"
Among the passages of verse mentioned by Tennyson were the eight lines beginning,—

Not peace she look'd—the Head: but rising up;
the description of a storm seen from Snowdon; and thirteen lines from the last canto, beginning,—

Look up, and let thy nature strike on mine.

He might have added that the description of the tournament is notable for swiftness in his verse, which is markedly deliberate, and of which almost the only fault is that it is sometimes too slow for the subject.

In The Princess are to be found a number of characteristic qualities, which students will appreciate the better the more they compare them with like qualities in Tennyson's poetry as a whole. Thus The Princess, like most of Tennyson's other works, is remarkable for the music everywhere to be heard in words and cadences as well as in metres; for the truth and beauty of its descriptions of nature; for sympathy, much tempered by conservatism, with the intellectual, the scientific, and the social movements of the time; for its reverent sense of law as the harmony of the world; and for its still deeper sense of religion as the source of that harmonic order.

I have just spoken of the truth and beauty of Tennyson's representation of nature, and, as this was one of the first among his gifts to attract wide attention, so there is no gift of his which young men and young women can more profitably study. For the comparison between the poet's art and the scenes and objects on which it is so directly founded, besides being in itself a delight, is also one of the readiest and richest means of education. In a little book entitled Cranford, published about half a century ago, there is a whimsical old-world bachelor who loves books as well as he loves the country and simple ways. Mrs. Gaskell, the author of Cranford, tells of a walk on which this delightful old Mr. Holbrook was accompanied by a young woman. Says she:

"He strode along, either wholly forgetting my existence, or soothed into silence by his pipe—and yet it was not silence exactly. He walked before me, with a stooping gait, his hands clasped behind him; and, as some tree or cloud, or glimpse of distant upland pastures, struck him, he quoted poetry to himself, saying it out loud in a grand, sonorous voice, with just the emphasis that true feeling and appreciation give. We came upon an old cedar-tree, which stood at one end of the house—

'The cedar spreads his dark-green layers of shade.'

"Capital term—"layers"! Wonderful man! I did not know whether he was speaking to me or not; but I put in an assenting 'wonderful,' although I knew nothing about it, just because I was tired of being forgotten, and of being consequently silent.

"He turned sharp round. 'Ay! you may say "wonderful."' Why, when I saw the review of his poems in Blackwood, I set off within an hour, and walked seven miles to Misselton (for the horses were not in the way) and ordered them. Now, what colour are ash-buds in March?"

"Is the man going mad? thought I. He is very like Don Quixote.

"'What colour are they, I say?' repeated he vehemently.

"'I am sure I don't know, sir,' said I, with the meekness of ignorance.

"'I knew you didn't. No more did I—an old fool that I am!—till this young man comes and tells me. "Black as ash-buds in March." And I've lived all my life in the country; more shame for me not to know. Black: they are jet-black, madam.' And he went off again, swinging along to the music of some rhyme he had got hold of."

Now, although Mr. Holbrook misquoted the line from The Gardener's Daughter, in both cases he kept the essence of the description. And many of us, even after living all our lives in the country, have been made ashamed by Tennyson of not seeing what goes on about us. American readers, of course, cannot always test the exactness of his observation, but they often find it possible to do so. In The Princess, when King Gama is outlined, his voice is "crack'd and small":

But bland the smile that, like a wrinkling wind
On glassy water, drove his cheek in lines.

In the night-scene of the last canto, the Prince dared not break the pause that had fallen between him and the Princess.
Till notice of a change in the dark world
Was lispt about the acacias, and a bird,
That early woke to feed her little ones,
Sent from a dewy breast a cry for light.

Earlier in the poem the scornful smile of the Princess is compared to

A stroke of cruel sunshine on the cliff,
When all the glens are drown'd in azure gloom
Of thunder-shower.

In these images, as in many another, one need not know any peculiarly English phase of the natural world to marvel at the exactness with which Tennyson has made his observation, or the beauty with which he has expressed it. A comparison of the Book of Nature with the Book of Tennyson is one among many good ways of reading both Poetry and Nature. C. T. C.
THE PRINCESS;
A MEDLEY.

PROLOGUE.

Sir Walter Vivian all a summer's day
Gave his broad lawns until the set of sun
Up to the people: thither flock'd at noon
His tenants, wife and child, and thither half
The neighbouring borough with their Institute
Of which he was the patron. I was there
From college, visiting the son,—the son
A Walter too,—with others of our set,
Five others: we were seven at Vivian-place.

And me that morning Walter show'd the house,
Greek, set with busts: from vases in the hall
Flowers of all heavens, and lovelier than their names,
Grew side by side; and on the pavement lay
Carved stones of the Abbey-ruin in the park,
Huge Ammonites, and the first bones of Time;
And on the tables every clime and age
Jumbled together; celts and calumets,
Claymore and snowshoe, toys in lava, fans
Of sandal, amber, ancient rosaries,
Laborious orient ivory sphere in sphere,
The cursed Malayan crease, and battle clubs
From the isles of palm: and higher on the walls,
Betwixt the monstrous horns of elk and deer,
His own forefathers' arms and armour hung.

And "This" he said "was Hugh's at Agincourt; 25
And that was old Sir Ralph's at Ascalon:
A good knight he! we keep a chronicle
With all about him"—which he brought, and I
Dived in a hoard of tales that dealt with knights,
Half-legend, half-historic, counts and kings 30
Who laid about them at their wills and died;
And mixt with these, a lady, one that arm'd
Her own fair head, and sallying thro' the gate,
Had beat her foes with slaughter from her walls.

"O miracle of women," said the book, 35
"O noble heart who, being strait-besieged
By this wild king to force her to his wish,
Nor bent, nor broke, nor shunn'd a soldier's death,
But now when all was lost or seem'd as lost—
Her stature more than mortal in the burst
Of sunrise, her arm lifted, eyes on fire—
Brake with a blast of trumpets from the gate,
And, falling on them like a thunderbolt,
She trampled some beneath her horses' heels,
And some were whelm'd with missiles of the wall, 45
And some were push'd with lances from the rock,
And part were drown'd within the whirling brook:
O miracle of noble womanhood!"
So sang the gallant glorious chronicle;
And, I all rapt in this, "Come out," he said,
"To the Abbey: there is Aunt Elizabeth
And sister Lilia with the rest." We went
(I kept the book and had my finger in it)
Down thro' the park: strange was the sight to me;
For all the sloping pasture murmur'd, sown
With happy faces and with holiday.
There moved the multitude, a thousand heads:
The patient leaders of their Institute
Taught them with facts. One rear'd a font of stone
And drew, from butts of water on the slope,
The fountain of the moment, playing, now
A twisted snake, and now a rain of pearls,
Or steep-up spout whereon the gilded ball
Danced like a wisp: and somewhat lower down
A man with knobs and wires and vials fired
A cannon: Echo answer'd in her sleep
From hollow fields: and here were telescopes
For azure views; and there a group of girls
In circle waited, whom the electric shock
Dislink'd with shrieks and laughter: round the lake
A little clock-work steamer paddling plied
And shook the lilies: perch'd about the knolls
A dozen angry models jetted steam:
A pretty railway ran: a fire-balloon
Rose gem-like up before the dusky groves
And dropt a fairy parachute and past:
And there thro’ twenty posts of telegraph
They flash’d a saucy message to and fro
Between the mimic stations; so that sport
Went hand in hand with Science; otherwhere
Pure sport: a herd of boys with clamour bowl’d
And stump’d the wicket; babies roll’d about
Like tumbled fruit in grass; and men and maids
Arranged a country dance, and flew thro’ light
And shadow, while the twangling violin
Struck up with Soldier-laddie, and overhead
The broad ambrosial aisles of lofty lime
Made noise with bees and breeze from end to end.

Strange was the sight and smacking of the time;
And long we gazed; but satiated at length
Came to the ruins. High-arch’d and ivy-claspt,
Of finest Gothic lighter than a fire,
Thro’ one wide chasm of time and frost they gave
The park, the crowd, the house; but all within
The sward was trim as any garden lawn:
And here we lit on Aunt Elizabeth,
And Lilia with the rest, and lady friends
From neighbour seats: and there was Ralph himself,
A broken statue propt against the wall,
As gay as any. Lilia, wild with sport,
Half child half woman as she was, had wound
A scarf of orange round the stony helm,
And robed the shoulders in a rosy silk,
That made the old warrior from his ivied nook
Glow like a sunbeam: near his tomb a feast.
Shone, silver-set; about it lay the guests,
And there we join'd them: then the maiden Aunt
Took this fair day for text, and from it preach'd
An universal culture for the crowd,

And all things great; but we, unworthier, told
Of college: he had climb'd across the spikes,
And he had squeezed himself betwixt the bars,
And he had breathed the Proctor's dogs; and one
Discuss'd his tutor, rough to common men,

But honeying at the whisper of a lord;
And one the Master, as a rogue in grain
Veneer'd with sanctimonious theory.

But while they talk'd, above their heads I saw
The feudal warrior lady-clad; which brought
My book to mind: and opening this I read
Of old Sir Ralph a page or two that rang
With tilt and tourney; then the tale of her
That drove her foes with slaughter from her walls,
And much I praised her nobleness, and "Where,"

Asked Walter, patting Lilia's head (she lay Beside him) "lives there such a woman now?"

Quick answer'd Lilia "There are thousands now
Such women, but convention beats them down:
It is but bringing up; no more than that:

You men have done it: how I hate you all!
Ah, were I something great! I wish I were
Some mighty poetess, I would shame you then,
That love to keep us children! O I wish
That I were some great princess, I would build
Far off from men a college like a man's,
And I would teach them all that men are taught;
We are twice as quick!" And here she shook aside
The hand that play'd the patron with her curls.

And one said smiling "Pretty were the sight
If our old halls could change their sex, and flaunt
With prudes for proctors, dowagers for deans,
And sweet girl-graduates in their golden hair.
I think they should not wear our rusty gowns,
But move as rich as Emperor-moths, or Ralph
Who shines so in the corner; yet I fear,
If there were many Lilias in the brood,
However deep you might embower the nest,
Some boy would spy it."

At this upon the sward
She tapt her tiny silken-sandal'd foot.
"That's your light way; but I would make it death
For any male thing but to peep at us."

Petulant she spoke, and at herself she laugh'd;
A rosebud set with little wilful thorns,
And sweet as English air could make her, she:
But Walter hail'd a score of names upon her,
And "petty Ogress," and "ungrateful Puss,"
And swore he long'd at college, only long'd,
All else was well, for she-society.
They boated and they cricketed; they talk'd
At wine, in clubs, of art, of politics;
They lost their weeks; they vexed the souls of deans;
They rode; they betted; made a hundred friends,
And caught the blossoms of the flying terms,
But miss'd the mignonette of Vivian-place,
The little hearth-flower Lilia. Thus he spoke.
Part banter, part affection.

"True," she said,
"We doubt not that. O yes, you miss'd us much.
I'll stake my ruby ring upon it you did."

She held it out; and as a parrot turns
Up thro' gilt wires a crafty loving eye,
And takes a lady's finger with all care,
And bites it for true heart and not for harm,
So he with Lilia's. Daintily she shriek'd
And wrung it. "Doubt my word again!" he said.

"Come, listen! here is proof that you were miss'd:
We seven stay'd at Christmas up to read;
And there we took one tutor as to read:
The hard-grained Muses of the cube and square
Were out of season: never man, I think,
So moulder'd in a sinecure as he:
For while our cloisters echo'd frosty feet,
And our long walks were stript as bare as brooms,
We did but talk you over, pledge you all
In wassail; often, like as many girls—
Sick for the hollies and the yews of home—
As many little trifling Lilias—play'd
Charades and riddles as at Christmas here,
And what's my thought and when and where and how,
And often told a tale from mouth to mouth
As here at Christmas.''

She remember'd that:
A pleasant game, she thought: she liked it more
Than magic music, forfeits, all the rest.
But these—what kind of tales did men tell men,
She wonder'd, by themselves?

A half-disdain
Perch'd on the pouted blossom of her lips:
And Walter nodded at me; "He began,
The rest would follow, each in turn; and so
We forged a sevenfold story. Kind? what kind?
Chimeras, crochets, Christmas solecisms,
Seven-headed monsters only made to kill
Time by the fire in winter.''

"Kill him now,
The tyrant! kill him in the summer too,''
Said Lilia; "Why not now?" the maiden Aunt
"Why not a summer's as a winter's tale?
A tale for summer as befits the time,
And something it should be to suit the place,
Heroic, for a hero lies beneath,
Grave, solemn!"

Walter warp'd his mouth at this
To something so mock-solemn, that I laugh'd
And Lilia woke with sudden-shrilling mirth
An echo like a ghostly woodpecker,
Hid in the ruins; till the maiden Aunt
(A little sense of wrong had touch'd her face
With colour) turn'd to me with "As you will;
Heroic if you will, or what you will,
Or be yourself your hero if you will.”

“Take Lilia, then, for heroine,” clamour’d he,
“And make her some great Princess, six feet high,
Grand, epic, homicidal; and be you
The Prince to win her!”

“Then follow me, the Prince,”
I answer’d, “each be hero in his turn!
Seven and yet one, like shadows in a dream.—
Heroic seems our Princess as required—
But something made to suit with Time and place,
A Gothic ruin and a Grecian house,
A talk of college and of ladies’ rights,
A feudal knight in silken masquerade,
And, yonder, shrieks and strange experiments
For which the good Sir Ralph had burnt them all—
This were a medley! we should have him back
Who told the ‘Winter’s tale’ to do it for us.
No matter: we will say whatever comes.
And let the ladies sing us, if they will,
From time to time, some ballad or a song
To give us breathing-space.’’

So I began,
And the rest follow’d: and the women sang
Between the rougher voices of the men,
Like linnets in the pauses of the wind:
And here I give the story and the songs.
PART I

A prince I was, blue-eyed, and fair in face,
Of temper amorous, as the first of May,
With lengths of yellow ringlet, like a girl,
For on my cradle shone the Northern star.

There lived an ancient legend in our house.
Some sorcerer, whom a far-off grandsire burnt
Because he cast no shadow, had foretold,
Dying, that none of all our blood should know
The shadow from the substance, and that one
Should come to fight with shadows and to fall.
For so, my mother said, the story ran.
And, truly, waking dreams were, more or less,
An old and strange affection of the house.
Myself too had weird seizures, Heaven knows what:
On a sudden in the midst of men and day,
And while I walk'd and talk'd as heretofore,
I seem'd to move among a world of ghosts,
And feel myself the shadow of a dream.
Our great court-Galen poised his gilt-head cane,
And paw'd his beard, and mutter'd "catalepsy."
My mother pitying made a thousand prayers;
My mother was as mild as any saint,
Half-canonised by all that look'd on her,
So gracious was her tact and tenderness:
But my good father thought a king a king;
He cared not for the affection of the house;
He held his sceptre like a pedant's wand
To lash offence, and with long arms and hands
Reach'd out, and pick'd offenders from the mass
For judgment.

Now it chanced that I had been
While life was yet in bud and blade, betroth'd
To one, a neighbouring Princess: she to me
Was proxy-wedded with a bootless calf
At eight years old; and still from time to time
Came murmurs of her beauty from the South,
And of her brethren, youths of puissance;
And still I wore her picture by my heart,
And one dark tress; and all around them both
Sweet thoughts would swarm as bees about their queen.

But when the days drew nigh that I should wed,
My father sent ambassadors with furs
And jewels, gifts, to fetch her: these brought back
A present, a great labour of the loom;
And therewithal an answer vague as wind:
Besides, they saw the king; he took the gifts;
He said there was a compact; that was true:
But then she had a will; was he to blame?
And maiden fancies; loved to live alone
Among her women; certain, would not wed.

That morning in the presence room I stood
With Cyril and with Florian, my two friends:
The first, a gentleman of broken means
(His father's fault) but given to starts and bursts
Of revel; and the last, my other heart,
And almost my half-self, for still we moved
Together, twinn'd as horse's ear and eye.

Now, while they spake, I saw my father's face
Grow long and troubled like a rising moon,
Inflamed with wrath: he started on his feet,
Tore the king's letter, snow'd it down, and rent
The wonder of the loom thro' warp and woof
From skirt to skirt; and at last he sware
That he would send a hundred thousand men,
And bring her in a whirlwind: then he chew'd
The thrice-turn'd cud of wrath, and cook'd his spleen,
Communing with his captains of the war.
At last I spoke. "My father, let me go.
It cannot be but some gross error lies
In this report, this answer of a king,
Whom all men rate as kind and hospitable:
Or, maybe, I myself, my bride once seen,
Whate'er my grief to find her less than fame,
May rue the bargain made." And Florian said:
"I have a sister at the foreign court,
Who moves about the Princess; she, you know,
Who wedded with a nobleman from thence:
He, dying lately, left her, as I hear,
The lady of three castles in that land:
Thro' her this matter might be sifted clean."
And Cyril whisper'd: "Take me with you too."

Then laughing "what, if these weird seizures come
Upon you in those lands, and no one near
To point you out the shadow from the truth!
Take me: I'll serve you better in a strait;
I grate on rusty hinges here:" but "No!"
Roar'd the rough king, "you shall not; we ourself
Will crush her pretty maiden fancies dead
In iron gauntlets: break the council up."

But when the council broke, I rose and past
Thro' the wild woods that hung about the town;
Found a still place, and pluck'd her likeness out;
Laid it on flowers, and watch'd it lying bathed
In the green gleam of dewy-tassell'd trees:
What were those fancies? wherefore break her troth?
Proud look'd the lips: but while I meditated
A wind arose, and rush'd upon the South,
And shook the songs, the whispers, and the shrieks
Of the wild woods together; and a Voice
Went with it, "Follow, follow, thou shalt win."

Then, ere the silver sickle of that month
Became her golden shield, I stole from court
With Cyril and with Florian, unperceived,
Cat-footed thro' the town and half in dread
To hear my father's clamour at our backs
With Ho! from some bay-window shake the night;
But all was quiet: from the bastion'd walls
Like threaded spiders, one by one, we dropt,
And flying reach'd the frontier: then we crost
To a livelier land; and so by tilth and grange,
And vines, and blowing bosks of wilderness,
We gain'd the mother-city thick with towers,
And in the imperial palace found the king.

His name was Gama; crack'd and small his voice,
But bland the smile that like a wrinkling wind
On glassy water drove his cheek in lines;
A little dry old man, without a star,
Not like a king: three days he feasted us,
And on the fourth I spake of why we came,
And my betroth'd. "You do us, Prince," he said,
Airing a snowy hand and signet gem,
"All honour. We remember love ourselves
In our sweet youth: there did a compact pass
Long summers back, a kind of ceremony—
I think the year in which our olives fail'd.
I would you had her, Prince, with all my heart,
With my full heart: but there were widows here,
Two widows, Lady Psyche, Lady Blanche;
They fed her theories, in and out of place
Maintaining that with equal husbandry
The woman were an equal to the man.
They harp'd on this; with this our banquets rang;
Our dances broke and buzz'd in knots of talk;
Nothing but this; my very ears were hot
To hear them: knowledge, so my daughter held,
Was all in all; they had but been, she thought,
As children; they must lose the child, assume
The woman: then, Sir, awful odes she wrote,
Too awful, sure, for what they treated of,
But all she is and does is awful; odes

About this losing of the child; and rhymes
And dismal lyrics, prophesying change
Beyond all reason: these the women sang;
And they that know such things—I sought but peace;
No critic I—would call them masterpieces:

They mastered me. At last she begg’d a boon,
A certain summer palace which I have
Hard by your father’s frontier: I said no,
Yet being an easy man, gave it: and there,
All wild to found an University

For maidens, on the spur she fled; and more
We know not,—only this: they see no men,
Not ev’n her brother Arac, nor the twins
Her brethren, tho’ they love her, look upon her
As on a kind of paragon; and I

(Pardon me saying it) were much loth to breed
Dispute betwixt myself and mine: but since
(And I confess with right) you think me bound
In some sort, I can give you letters to her;
And yet, to speak the truth, I rate your chance

Almost at naked nothing.”

Thus the king;
And I, tho’ nettled that he seem’d to slur
With garrulous ease and oily courtesies
Our formal compact, yet, not less (all frets
But chasing me on fire to find my bride
Went forth again with both my friends. We rode
Many a long league back to the North. At last
From hills, that look'd across a land of hope,
We dropt with evening on a rustic town
Set in a gleaming river's crescent-curve,
Close at the boundary of the liberties;
There, enter'd an old hostel, call'd mine host
To council, plied him with his richest wines,
And show'd the late-writ letters of the king.

He with a long low sibilation, stared
As blank as death in marble; then exclaim'd
Averring it was clear against all rules
For any man to go: but as his brain
Began to mellow, "If the king," he said,
"Had given us letters, was he bound to speak?
The king would bear him out;" and at the last—
The summer of the vine in all his veins—
"No doubt that we might make it worth his while.
She once had past that way; he heard her speak;
She scared him; life! he never saw the like;
She look'd as grand as doomsday and as grave:
And he, he reverenced his liege-lady there;
He always made a point to post with mares;
His daughter and his housemaid were the boys:
The land, he understood, for miles about
Was till'd by women; all the swine were sows,
And all the dogs"—

But while he jested thus,
A thought flash'd thro' me which I clothed in act,
Remembering how we three presented Maid
Or Nymph, or Goddess, at high tide of feast,
In masque or pageant at my father's court.
We sent mine host to purchase female gear;
He brought it, and himself, a sight to shake
The midriff of despair with laughter, holp
To lace us up, till, each, in maiden plumes
We rustled: him we gave a costly bribe
To guerdon silence, mounted our good steeds,
And boldly ventured on the liberties.

We follow'd up the river as we rode,
And rode till midnight when the college lights
Began to glitter firefly-like in copse
And linden alley: then we past an arch,
Whereon a woman-statue rose with wings
From four wing'd horses dark against the stars;
And some inscription ran along the front,
But deep in shadow: further on we gain'd
A little street half garden and half house;
But scarce could hear each other speak for noise
Of clocks and chimes, like silver hammers falling
On silver anvils, and the splash and stir
Of fountains spouted up and showering down
In meshes of the jasmine and the rose:
And all about us peal'd the nightingale,
Rapt in her song, and careless of the snare.

There stood a bust of Pallas for a sign,
By two sphere lamps blazon'd like Heaven and Earth
With constellation and with continent,
Above an entry: riding in, we call'd;
A plump-arm'd Ostleress and a stable wench
Came running at the call, and help'd us down.
Then stept a buxom hostess forth, and sail'd,
Full-blown, before us into rooms which gave
Upon a pillar'd porch, the bases lost
In laurel: her we ask'd of that and this,
And who were tutors. "Lady Blanche," she said,
"And Lady Psyche." "Which was prettiest, Best-natured?" "Lady Psyche." "Hers are we,"
One voice, we cried; and I sat down and wrote,
In such a hand as when a field of corn
Bows all its ears before the roaring East;

"Three ladies of the Northern empire pray
Your Highness would enroll them with your own,
As Lady Psyche's pupils."

This I seal'd:
The seal was Cupid bent above a scroll,
And o'er his head Uranian Venus hung,
And raised the blinding bandage from his eyes:
I gave the letter to be sent with dawn;
And then to bed, where half in doze I seem'd
To float about a glimmering night, and watch
A full sea glazed with muffled moonlight, swell
On some dark shore just seen that it was rich.
PART II

As thro' the land at eve we went,
   And pluck'd the ripen'd ears,
We fell out, my wife and I,
O we fell out I know not why,
   And kiss'd again with tears.
And blessings on the falling out
   That all the more endears,
When we fall out with those we love
   And kiss again with tears!
For when we came where lies the child
   We lost in other years,
There above the little grave,
O there above the little grave,
   We kiss'd again with tears.

At break of day the College Portress came:
She brought us Academic silks, in hue
The lilac, with a silken hood to each,
   And zoned with gold; and now when these were on,
And we as rich as moths from dusk cocoons,
She, curtseying her obeisance, let us know
The Princess Ida waited: out we paced,
I first, and following thro' the porch that sang
   All round with laurel, issued in a court
Compact of lucid marbles, boss'd with lengths
Of classic frieze, with ample awnings gay
Betwixt the pillars, and with great urns of flowers.
The Muses and the Graces, group'd in threes,
Enring'd a billowing fountain in the midst;
And here and there on lattice edges lay
Or book or lute; but hastily we past,
And up a flight of stairs into the hall.

There at a board by tome and paper sat,
With two tame leopards couch'd beside her throne,
All beauty compass'd in a female form,
The Princess; liker to the inhabitant
Of some clear planet close upon the Sun,
Than our man's earth; such eyes were in her head,
And so much grace and power, breathing down
From over her arch'd brows, with every turn
Lived thro' her to the tips of her long hands,
And to her feet. She rose her height, and said:

"'We give you welcome: not without redound
Of use and glory to yourselves ye come,
The first-fruits of the stranger: aftertime,
And that full voice which circles round the grave,
Will rank you nobly, mingled up with me.
What! are the ladies of your land so tall?'"
"'We of the court,'" said Cyril. "'From the court,'"
She answer'd, "'then ye know the Prince?'" and he:
"'The climax of his age! as tho' there were
One rose in all the world, your Highness that,
He worships your ideal:'" she replied:
"'We scarcely thought in our own hall to hear
This barren verbiage, current among men,
Light coin, the tinsel clink of compliment."
Your flight from out your bookless wilds would seem
As arguing love of knowledge and of power;
Your language proves you still the child. Indeed,
We dream not of him: when we set our hand
To this great work, we purposed with ourself
Never to wed. You likewise will do well,
Ladies, in entering here, to cast and fling
The tricks, which make us toys of men, that so,
Some future time, if so indeed you will,
You may with those self-styled our lords ally
Your fortunes, justlier balanced, scale with scale.”

At those high words, we conscious of ourselves,
Perused the matting; then an officer
Rose up, and read the statutes, such as these:
Not for three years to correspond with home;
Not for three years to cross the liberties;
Not for three years to speak with any men;
And many more, which hastily subscribed,
We enter’d on the boards: and “Now,” she cried,
“Ye are green wood, see ye warp not. Look, our hall!
Our statues!—not of those that men desire,
Sleek Odalisques, or oracles of mode,
Nor stunted squaws of West or East; but she
That taught the Sabine how to rule, and she
The foundress of the Babylonian wall,
The Carian Artemisia strong in war,
The Rhodope, that built the pyramid,
Clelia, Cornelia, with the Palmyrene
That fought Aurelian, and the Roman brows
Of Agrippina. Dwell with these, and lose
Convention, since to look on noble forms
Makes noble thro' the sensuous organism
That which is higher. O lift your natures up:
Embrace our aims: work out your freedom. Girls,
Knowledge is now no more a fountain seal'd:
Drink deep, until the habits of the slave,
The sins of emptiness, gossip and spite
And slander, die. Better not be at all
Than not be noble. Leave us: you may go:
To-day the Lady Psyche will harangue
The fresh arrivals of the week before;
For they press in from all the provinces,
And fill the hive."

She spoke, and bowing waved
Dismissal: back again we crost the court
To Lady Psyche's: as we enter'd in,
There sat along the forms, like morning doves
That sun their milky bosoms on the thatch,
A patient range of pupils; she herself:
Erect behind a desk of satin-wood,
A quick brunette, well-moulded, falcon-eyed,
And on the hither side, or so she look'd,
Of twenty summers. At her left, a child,
In shining draperies, headed like a star,
Her maiden babe, a double April old,
Aglaia slept. We sat: the Lady glanced:
Then Florian, but no livelier than the dame
That whisper'd "Asses' ears" among the sedge, "My sister." "Comely, too, by all that's fair," 100 Said Cyril. "O hush, hush!" and she began.

"This world was once a fluid haze of light, 105 Till toward the centre set the starry tides, And eddied into suns, that wheeling cast
The planets: then the monster, then the man;
Tattoo'd or woaded, winter-clad in skins, Raw from the prime, and crushing down his mate;
As yet we find in barbarous isles, and here Among the lowest."

Thereupon she took
A bird's-eye view of all the ungracious past;
110 Glanced at the legendary Amazon
As emblematic of a nobler age;
Appraised the Lycian custom, spoke of those
That lay at wine with Lar and Lucumo;
Ran down the Persian, Grecian, Roman lines
Of empire, and the woman's state in each,
How far from just; till warming with her theme
She fulmined out her scorn of laws Salique
And little-footed China, touch'd on Mahomet
With much contempt, and came to chivalry:
When some respect, however slight, was paid
To woman, superstition all awry:
However then commenced the dawn: a beam
120 Had slanted forward, falling in a land
Of promise; fruit would follow. Deep, indeed,
Their debt of thanks to her who first had dared
To leap the rotten pales of prejudice,
Disyoke their necks from custom, and assert
None lordlier than themselves but that which made
Woman and man. She had founded; they must build.
Here might they learn whatever men were taught: 130
Let them not fear: some said their heads were less:
Some men's were small; not they the least of men;
For often fineness compensated size:
Besides the brain was like the hand, and grew
With using; thence the man's, if more was more; 135
He took advantage of his strength to be
First in the field: some ages had been lost;
But woman ripen'd earlier, and her life
Was longer; and albeit their glorious names
Were fewer, scatter'd stars, yet since in truth
The highest is the measure of the man,
And not the Kaffir, Hottentot, Malay,
Nor those horn-handed breakers of the glebe,
But Homer, Plato, Verulam; even so
With woman: and in arts of government
Elizabeth and others; arts of war
The peasant Joan and others; arts of grace
Sappho and others vied with any man:
And, last not least, she who had left her place,
And bow'd her state to them, that they might grow 140
To use and power on this Oasis, lapt
In the arms of leisure, sacred from the blight
Of ancient influence and scorn.

At last
She rose upon a wind of prophecy
Dilating on the future; "everywhere
Two heads in council, two beside the hearth,
Two in the tangled business of the world,
Two in the liberal offices of life,
Two plummets dropt for one to sound the abyss
Of science, and the secrets of the mind:
Musician, painter, sculptor, critic, more:
And everywhere the broad and bounteous Earth
Should bear a double growth of those rare souls,
Poets, whose thoughts enrich the blood of the world."

She ended here, and beckon'd us: the rest
Parted; and, glowing full-faced welcome, she Began to address us, and was moving on
In gratulation, till as when a boat
Tacks, and the slacken'd sail flaps, all her voice
Faltering and fluttering in her throat, she cried
"My brother!" "Well, my sister." "O," she said,
"What do you here? and in this dress? and these?
Why who are these? a wolf within the fold!
A pack of wolves! the Lord be gracious to me!
A plot, a plot, a plot, to ruin all!"
"No plot, no plot," he answer'd. "Wretched boy,
How saw you not the inscription on the gate,
Let no man enter in on pain of death?"
"And if I had," he answer'd, "who could think
The softer Adams of your Academe,
O sister, Sirens tho’ they be, were such
As chanted on the blanching bones of men?”
“But you will find it otherwise,” she said.
“You jest: ill jesting with edge-tools! my vow
Binds me to speak, and O that iron will,
That axelike edge unturnable, our Head,
The Princess.” “Well then, Psyche, take my life,
And nail me like a weasel on a grange
For warning: bury me beside the gate,
And cut this epitaph above my bones;
Here lies a brother by a sister slain,
All for the common good of womankind.”
“Let me die too,” said Cyril, “having seen
And heard the Lady Psyche.”

I struck in:
“Albeit so mask’d, Madam, I love the truth;
Receive it; and in me behold the Prince
Your countryman, affianced years ago
To the Lady Ida: here, for here she was,
And thus (what other way was left) I came.”
“O Sir, O Prince, I have no country; none;
If any, this; but none. Whate’er I was
Disrooted, what I am is grafted here.
Affianced, Sir? love-whispers may not breathe
Within this vestal limit, and how should I,
Who am not mine, say, live: the thunderbolt
Hangs silent; but prepare: I speak; it falls.”
“Yet pause,” I said: “for that inscription there,
I think no more of deadly lurks therein.
Than in a clapper clapping in a garth,
To scare the fowl from fruit: if more there be,
If more and acted on, what follows? war;
Your own work marr'd: for this your Academe,
Whichever side be Victor, in the halloo
Will topple to the trumpet down, and pass
With all fair theories only made to gild
A stormless summer."  "Let the Princess judge
Of that," she said: "farewell, Sir—and to you.
I shudder at the sequel, but I go."

"Are you that Lady Psyche," I rejoin'd,
"The fifth in line from that old Florian,
Yet hangs his portrait in my father's hall
(The gaunt old Baron with his beetle brow
Sun-shaded in the heat of dusty fights)
As he bestrode my Grandsire, when he fell,
And all else fled? we point to it, and we say,
The loyal warmth of Florian is not cold
But branches current yet in kindred veins."
"Are you that Psyche," Florian added; "she
With whom I sang about the morning hills,
Flung ball, flew kite, and raced the purple fly,
And snared the squirrel of the glen? are you
That Psyche, wont to bind my throbbing brow,
To smoothe my pillow, mix the foaming draught
Of fever, tell me pleasant tales, and read
My sickness down to happy dreams? are you
That brother-sister Psyche, both in one?
You were that Psyche, but what are you now?
"You are that Psyche," Cyril said, "for whom I would be that forever which I seem, Woman, if I might sit beside your feet, And glean your scatter'd sapience."

Then once more,

"Are you that Lady Psyche," I began,
"That on her bridal morn before she past From all her old companions, when the king Kiss'd her pale cheek, declared that ancient ties Would still be dear beyond the southern hills; That were there any of our people there In want or peril, there was one to hear And help them? look! for such are these and I."

"Are you that Psyche," Florian ask'd, "to whom, In gentler days, your arrow-wounded fawn Came flying while you sat beside the well? The creature laid his muzzle on your lap, And sobb'd, and you sobb'd with it, and the blood Was sprinkled on your kirtle, and you wept. That was fawn's blood, not brother's, yet you wept. O by the bright head of my little niece, You were that Psyche, and what are you now?"

"You are that Psyche," Cyril said again, "The mother of the sweetest little maid, That ever crow'd for kisses."

"Out upon it!"

She answer'd, "peace! and why should I not play The Spartan Mother with emotion, be The Lucius Junius Brutus of my kind? Him you call great: he for the common weal,
The fading politics of mortal Rome,
As I might slay this child, if good need were,
Slew both his sons: and I, shall I, on whom
The secular emancipation turns

Of half this world, be swerved from right to save
A prince, a brother? a little will I yield.
Best so, perchance, for us, and well for you.
O hard, when love and duty clash! I fear
My conscience will not count me fleckless; yet—

Hear my conditions: promise (otherwise
You perish) as you came, to slip away
To-day, to-morrow, soon: it shall be said,
These women were too barbarous, would not learn;
They fled, who might have shamed us: promise all.”

What could we else, we promised each; and she,
Like some wild creature newly caged, commenced
A to-and-fro, so pacing till she paused
By Florian; holding out her lily arms
Took both his hands, and smiling faintly said:
‘I knew you at the first: tho’ you have grown
You scarce have alter’d: I am sad and glad
To see you, Florian. I give thee to death
My brother! it was duty spoke, not I.
My needful seeming harshness, pardon it.

Our mother, is she well?”

With that she kiss’d
His forehead, then, a moment after, clung
About him, and betwixt them blossom’d up
From out a common vein of memory
Sweet household talk, and phrases of the hearth,
And far allusion, till the gracious dews
Began to glisten and to fall: and while
They stood, so rapt, we gazing, came a voice,
"I brought a message here from Lady Blanche."
Back started she, and turning round we saw
The Lady Blanche's daughter where she stood
Melissa, with her hand upon the lock,
A rosy blonde, and in a college gown,
That clad her like an April daffodilly
(Her mother's colour) with her lips apart,
And all her thoughts as fair within her eyes.
As bottom agates seem to wave and float
In crystal currents of clear morning seas.

So stood that same fair creature at the door.
Then Lady Psyche, "Ah—Melissa—you!
You heard us!" and Melissa, "O pardon me,
I heard, I could not help it, did not wish:
But, dearest Lady, pray you fear me not,
Nor think I bear that heart within my breast,
To give three gallant gentlemen to death."
"I trust you," said the other, "for we two
Were always friends, none closer, elm and vine:
But yet your mother's jealous temperament—
Let not your prudence, dearest, drowse, or prove
The Danaïd of a leaky vase, for fear
This whole foundation ruin, and I lose
My honour, these their lives." "Ah, fear me not," Replied Melissa; "no—I would not tell,
No, not for all Aspasia's cleverness,
No, not to answer, Madam, all those hard things
That Sheba came to ask of Solomon."

"Be it so" the other, "that we still may lead
The new light up, and culminate in peace,
For Solomon may come to Sheba yet."

Said Cyril, "Madam, he the wisest man
Feasted the woman wisest then, in halls
Of Lebanese cedar: nor should you
(Tho', Madam, you should answer, we would ask)
Less welcome find among us, if you came
Among us, debtors for our lives to you,
Myself for something more." He said not what
But "Thanks," she answered "Go: we have been too long
Together: keep your hoods about the face;
They do so that affect abstraction here.
Speak little; mix not with the rest; and hold
Your promise: all, I trust, may yet be well."

We turn'd to go, but Cyril took the child,
And held her round the knees against his waist,
And blew the swoll'n cheek of a trumpeter,
While Psyche watch'd them, smiling, and the child
Push'd her flat hand against his face and laugh'd;
And thus our conference closed.
And then we stroll'd

For half the day thro' stately theatres
Bench'd crescent-wise. In each we sat, we heard
The grave Professor. On the lecture slate
The circle rounded under female hands
With flawless demonstration: follow'd then
A classic lecture, rich in sentiment,
With scraps of thundrous Epic lilted out
By violet-hooded Doctors, elegies
And quoted odes, and jewels five-words long
That on the stretch’d forefinger of all Time
Sparkle for ever: then we dipt in all
That treats of whatsoever is, the state,
The total chronicles of man, the mind,
The morals, something of the frame, the rock,
The star, the bird, the fish, the shell, the flower,
Electric, chemic laws, and all the rest,
And whatsoever can be taught and known;
Till like three horses that have broken fence
And glutted all night long breast-deep in corn,
We issued gorged with knowledge, and I spoke:
"Why, Sirs, they do all this as well as we."
"They hunt old trails," said Cyril, "very well;
But when did woman ever yet invent?"
"Ungracious!" answer’d Florian; "have you learnt
No more from Psyche’s lecture, you that talk’d
The trash that made me sick, and almost sad?"
"O trash," he said, "but with a kernel in it.
Should I not call her wise, who made me wise?
And learnt? I learnt more from her in a flash
Than if my brainpan were an empty hull,
And every Muse tumbled a science in.
A thousand hearts lie fallow in these halls,
And round these halls a thousand baby loves
Fly twanging headless arrows at the hearts
Whence follows many a vacant pang; but C:
With me, Sir, enter'd in the bigger boy,
The Head of all the golden-shafted firm,
The long-limb'd lad that had a Psyche too;
He cleft me thro' the stomacher; and now
What think you of it, Florian? do I chase
The substance or the shadow? will it hold?
I have no sorcerer's malison on me,
No ghostly hauntings like his Highness. I
Flatter myself that always everywhere
I know the substance when I see it. Well,
Are castles shadows? Three of them? Is she
The sweet proprietress a shadow? If not,
Shall those three castles patch my tatter'd coat?
For dear are those three castles to my wants,
And dear is sister Psyche to my heart,
And two dear things are one of double worth,
And much I might have said, but that my zone
Unmann'd me: then the Doctors! O to hear
The Doctors! O to watch the thirsty plants
Imbibing! once or twice I thought to roar,
To break my chain, to snake my mane: but thou
Modulate me, Soul of mincing mimicry!
Make liquid treble of that bassoon, my throat,
Abase those eyes that ever loved to meet
Star-sisters answering under crescent brows;
Abate the stride, which speaks of man, and loose
A flying charm of blushes o'er this cheek,
Where they like swallows coming out of time
Will wonder why they came: but hark the bell!
For dinner, let us go!"

And in we stream'd

Among the columns, pacing staid and still
By twos and threes, till all from end to end
With beauties every shade of brown and fair
In colours gayer than the morning mist,
The long hall glitter'd like a bed of flowers.
How might a man not wander from his wits
Pierced thro' with eyes, but that I kept mine own
Intent on her, who rapt in glorious dreams,
The second-sight of some Astræan age,
Sat compass'd with professors: they, the while,
Discuss'd a doubt and tost it to and fro:
A clamour thicken'd, mixt with inmost terms
Of art and science: Lady Blanche alone
Of faded form and haughtiest lineaments,
With all her autumn tresses falsely brown,
Shot sidelong daggers at us, a tiger-cat
In act to spring.

At last a solemn grace

Concluded, and we sought the gardens: there
One walk'd reciting by herself, and one
In this hand held a volume as to read,
And smoothed a petted peacock down with that:
Some to a low song oar'd a shallop by,
Or under arches of the marble bridge
Hung shadow'd from the heat: some hid and sought
In the orange thickets: others tost a ball
Above the fountain-jets, and back again
With laughter: others lay about the lawns,
Of the older sort, and murmur’d that their May
Was passing: what was learning unto them?
They wish’d to marry; they could rule a house;
Men hated learned women: but we three
Sat muffled like the Fates: and often came
Melissa hitting all we saw with shafts
Of gentle satire, kin to charity,
That harm’d not: then day droop’d; the chapel bells
Call’d us: we left the walks; we mixt with those
Six hundred maidens clad in purest white,
Before two streams of light from wall to wall,
While the great organ almost burst his pipes,
Groaning for power, and rolling thro’ the court
A long melodious thunder to the sound
Of solemn psalms, and silver litanies,
The work of Ida, to call down from Heaven
A blessing on her labours for the world.
PART III

Sweet and low, sweet and low,
Wind of the western sea,
Low, low, breathe and blow,
Wind of the western sea!
Over the rolling waters go,
Come from the dying moon, and blow,
Blow him again to me;
While my little one, while my pretty one, sleep!

Sleep and rest, sleep and rest,
Father will come to thee soon;
Rest, rest, on mother's breast,
Father will come to thee soon;
Father will come to his babe in the nest,
Silver sails all out of the west
Under the silver moon:
Sleep, my little one, sleep, my pretty one, sleep.

Morn in the white wake of the morning star
Came furrowing all the orient into gold.
We rose, and each by other drest with care,
Descended to the court that lay three parts
In shadow, but the Muses' heads were touch'd
Above the darkness from their native East.

There while we stood beside the fount, and watch'd
Or seem'd to watch the dancing bubble, approach'd
Melissa, tinged with wan from lack of sleep,
10 Or grief, and glowing round her dewy eyes
The circled Iris of a night of tears;
"And fly," she cried, "O fly, while yet you may!
My mother knows;" and when I ask'd her "how,"
"My fault," she wept, "my fault! and yet not mine;
15 Yet mine in part. O hear me, pardon me.
My mother, 'tis her wont from night to night
To rail at Lady Psyche and her side.
She says the Princess should have been the Head,
Herself and Lady Psyche the two arms;
20 And so it was agreed when first they came;
But Lady Psyche was the right hand now,
And she the left, or not, or seldom used;
Hers more than half the students, all the love.
And so last night she fell to canvass you:
25 Her countrywomen! she did not envy her.
'Who ever saw such wild barbarians?
Girls?—more like men!' and at these words the snake,
My secret, seem'd to stir within my breast;
And oh, Sirs, could I help it, but my cheek
30 Began to burn and burn, and her lynx eye
To fix and make me hotter, till she laugh'd:
'O marvellously modest maiden, you!
Men! girls, like men! why, if they had been men
You need not set your thoughts in rubric thus 35 For wholesale comment.' Pardon, I am ashamed
That I must needs repeat for my excuse
70  THE PRINCESS; A MEDLEY

What looks so little graceful: 'men' (for still
My mother went revolving on the word)
'And so they are—very like men indeed—
And with that woman closeted for hours!'
Then came these dreadful words out one by one,
'Why—these—are—men:' I shudder'd: 'and you know it.'
'O ask me nothing,' I said: 'And she knows too,
And she conceals it.' So my mother clutch'd
The truth at once, but with no word from me;
And now thus early risen she goes to inform
The Princess: Lady Psyche will be crush'd;
But you may yet be sav'd, and therefore fly:
But heal me with your pardon ere you go.'

"What pardon, sweet Melissa, for a blush?"
Said Cyril: "Pale one, blush again: than wear
Those lilies, better blush our lives away.
Yet let us breathe for one hour more in Heaven,"
He added, "lest some classic Angel speak
In scorn of us, 'They mounted, Ganymedes,
To tumble, Vulcans, on the second morn.'
But I will melt this marble into wax
To yield us farther furlough:'" and he went.

Melissa shook her doubtful curls, and thought
He scarce would prosper. "Tell us," Florian ask'd,
"How grew this feud betwixt the right and left."
"O, long ago," she said, "betwixt these two
Division smoulders hidden; 'tis my mother
Too jealous, often fretful as the wind
Pent in a crevice: much I bear with her:
I never knew my father, but she says
(God help her) she was wedded to a fool;
And still she rail'd against the state of things.
She had the care of Lady Ida's youth,
And from the Queen's decease she brought her up.
But when your sister came she won the heart
Of Ida: they were still together, grew
(For so they said themselves) inosculated;
Consonant chords that shiver to one note;
One mind in all things: yet my mother still
Affirms your Psyche thieved her theories,
And angled with them for her pupil's love:
She calls her plagiarist; I know not what:
But I must go: I dare not tarry," and light,
As flies the shadow of a bird, she fled.

Then murmur'd Florian gazing after her,
"An open-hearted maiden, true and pure.
If I could love, why this were she: how pretty
Her blushing was, and how she blush'd again,
As if to close with Cyril's random wish:
Not like your Princess cram'd with erring pride,
Nor like poor Psyche whom she drags in tow."

"The crane," I said, "may chatter of the crane,
The dove may murmur of the dove, but I
An eagle clang an eagle to the sphere."
My princess, O my princess! true she errs,
But in her own grand way: being herself
Three times more noble than three score of men,
She sees herself in every woman else,
And so she wears her error like a crown
To blind the truth and me; for her, and her,
Hebes are they to hand ambrosia, mix
The nectar; but—ah she—whene'er she moves
The Samian Herè rises and she speaks
A Memnon smitten with the morning Sun."

So saying, from the court we paced, and gain'd
The terrace ranged along the Northern front,
And leaning there on those balusters, high
Above the empurpled champaign, drank the gale
That blown about the foliage underneath,
And sated with the innumerable rose,
Beat balm upon our eyelids. Hither came
Cyril, and yawning, "O hard task," he cried;
"No fighting shadows here! I forced a way
Thro' solid opposition crabb'd and gnarl'd.
Better to clear prime forests, heave and thump
A league of street in summer solstice down,
Than hammer at this reverend gentlewoman.
I knock'd and, bidden, enter'd: found her there
At point to move, and settled in her eyes
The green malignant light of coming storm.
Sir, I was courteous, every phrase well-oil'd,
As man's could be; yet maiden-meek I pray'd
Concealment: she demanded who we were,
And why we came? I fabled nothing fair,
But, your example pilot, told her all.
Up went the hush'd amaze of hand and eye.
But when I dwelt upon your old affiance,
She answer'd sharply that I talk'd astray.

I urged the fierce inscription on the gate,
And our three lives. True—we had limed our-

With open eyes, and we must take the chance.
But such extremes, I told her, well might harm
The woman's cause. 'Not more than now,' she said,
'So puddled as it is with favouritism.'
I tried the mother's heart. Shame might befall
Melissa, knowing, saying not she knew:
Her answer was, 'Leave me to deal with that.'
I spoke of war to come and many deaths,

And she replied, her duty was to speak,
And duty duty, clear of consequences.
I grew discouraged, Sir; but since I knew
No rock so hard but that a little wave
May beat admission in a thousand years,

I re-commenced; 'Decide not ere you pause.
I find you here but in the second place,
Some say the third—the authentic foundress you
I offer boldly: we will seat you highest:
Wink at our advent: help my prince to gain

His rightful bride, and here I promise you
Some palace in our land, where you shall reign
The head and heart of all our fair she-world,
And your great name flow on with broadening time
For ever.' Well, she balanced this a little, And told me she would answer us to-day, Meantime be mute; thus much, nor more I gain'd.'"

He ceasing, came a message from the Head. "That afternoon the Princess rode to take The dip of certain strata to the North. Would we go with her? we should find the land Worth seeing; and the river made a fall Out yonder;" then she pointed on to where A double hill ran up his furrowy forks Beyond the thick-leaved platans of the vale.

Agreed to, this, the day fled on thro' all Its range of duties to the appointed hour. Then summon'd to the porch we went. She stood Among her maidsens, higher by the head, Her back against a pillar, her foot on one Of those tame leopards. Kittenlike he roll'd And paw'd about her sandal. I drew near; I gazed. On a sudden my strange seizure came Upon me, the weird vision of our house: The Princess Ida seem'd a hollow show, Her gay-furr'd cats a painted fantasy, Her college and her maidsens empty masks, And I myself the shadow of a dream, For all things were and were not. Yet I felt My heart beat thick with passion and with awe; Then from my breast the involuntary sigh Brake, as she smote me with the light of eyes
That lent my knee desire to kneel, and shook
My pulses, till to horse we got, and so
Went forth in long retinue following up
The river as it narrow'd to the hills.

I rode beside her and to me she said:
"O friend, we trust that you esteem'd us not
Too harsh to your companion yestermorn;
Unwillingly we spake." "No, not to her,"
I answer'd, "but to one of whom we spake
Your Highness might have seem'd the thing you say."
"Again?" she cried, "are you ambassadresses
From him to me? we give you, being strange,
A license: speak, and let the topic die."

I stammer'd that I knew him—could have wish'd—
"Our king expects—was there no precontract?
There is no truer-hearted—ah, you seem
All he prefigured, and he could not see
The bird of passage flying south but long'd
To follow: surely, if your Highness keep
Your purport, you will shock him e'en to death,
Or baser courses, children of despair."

"Poor boy," she said, "can he not read—no books?
Quoit, tennis, ball—no games? nor deals in that
Which men delight in, martial exercise?"
To nurse a blind ideal like a girl,
Methinks he seems no better than a girl;
As girls were once, as we ourself have been:
We had our dreams; perhaps he mixt with them:
We touch on our dead self, nor shun to do it,
Being other—since we learnt our meaning here,
To lift the woman’s fallen divinity
Upon an even pedestal with man.”

She paused, and added with a haughtier smile
“And as to precontracts, we move, my friend,
At no man’s beck, but know ourself and thee,
O Vashti, noble Vashti! Summon’d out
She kept her state, and left the drunken king
To brawl at Shushan underneath the palms.”

“Alas your Highness breathes full East,” I said,
“On that which leans to you. I know the Prince.
I prize his truth; and then how vast a work
To assail this gray preëminence of man!
You grant me license; might I use it? think;
Ere half be done perchance your life may fail;
Then comes the feeblter heiress of your plan,
And takes and ruins all; and thus your pains
May only make that footprint upon sand
Which old-recurring waves of prejudice
Resmooth to nothing; might I dread that you,
With only Fame for spouse and your great deeds
For issue, yet may live in vain, and miss,
Meanwhile, what every woman counts her due, Love, children, happiness?"

And she exclaim'd,

230 "Peace, you young savage of the Northern wild!
What! tho' your Prince's love were like a God's,
Have we not made ourself the sacrifice?
You are bold indeed: we are not talk'd to thus:
Yet will we say for children, would they grew

235 Like field-flowers everywhere! we like them well:
But children die; and let me tell you, girl,
How'e'rr you babble, great deeds cannot die;
They with the sun and moon renew their light
For ever, blessing those that look on them.

240 Children—that men may pluck them from our hearts,
Kill us with pity, break us with ourselves—
O—children—there is nothing upon earth
More miserable than she that has a son
And sees him err: nor would we work for fame;

245 Tho' she perhaps might reap the applause of Great,
Who learns the one Pou sto whence afterhands
May move the world, tho' she herself effect
But little: wherefore up and act, nor shrink
For fear our solid aim be dissipated

250 By frail successors. Would, indeed, we had been,
In lieu of many mortal flies, a race
Of giants living, each, a thousand years,
That we might see our own work out, and watch
The sandy footprint harden into stone."
I answer'd nothing, doubtful in myself
If that strange Poet-princess with her grand
Imaginations might at all be won.
And she broke out interpreting my thoughts:

"No doubt we seem a kind of monster to you;
We are used to that: for women, up till this
Cramp'd under worse than South-sea-isle taboo,
Dwarfs of the gynæceum, fail so far
In high desire, they know not, cannot guess
How much their welfare is a passion to us.
If we could give them surer, quicker proof—
Oh if our end were less achievable
By slow approaches, than by single act
Of immolation, any phase of death,
We were as prompt to spring against the pikes,
Or down the fiery gulf as talk of it,
To compass our dear sisters' liberties."

She bow'd as if to veil a noble tear;
And up we came to where the river sloped
To plunge in cataract, shattering on black blocks
A breath of thunder. O'er it shook the woods,
And danced the colour, and, below, stuck out
The bones of some vast bulk that lived and roar'd
Before man was. She gazed awhile and said,
"As these rude bones to us, are we to her
That will be." "Dare we dream of that," I ask'd,
"Which wrought us, as the workman and his work,
That practice betters?” “How,” she cried, “you love
The metaphysics! read and earn our prize,
A golden brooch: beneath an emerald plane

Sits Diotima, teaching him that died
Of hemlock; our device; wrought to the life;
She rapt upon her subject, he on her:
For there are schools for all.” “And yet,” I said,
“Methinks I have not found among them all
One anatomic.” “Nay, we thought of that,”
She answer’d, “but it pleased us not: in truth
We shudder but to dream our maids should ape
Those monstrous males that carve the living hound,
And cram him with the fragments of the grave,
Or in the dark dissolving human heart,
And holy secrets of this microcosm.
Dabbling a shameless hand with shameful jest,
Encarnalise their spirits: yet we know
Knowledge is knowledge, and this matter hangs:

Howbeit ourself, foreseeing casualty,
Nor willing men should come among us, learnt,
For many weary moons before we came,
This craft of healing. Were you sick, ourself
Would tend upon you. To your question now,
Which touches on the workman and his work.
Let there be light and there was light: ’tis so:
For was, and is, and will be, are but is;
And all creation is one act at once,
The birth of light: but we that are not all,
As parts, can see but parts, now this, now that,
And live, perforce, from thought to thought, and make
One act a phantom of succession: thus
Our weakness somehow shapes the shadow, Time;
But in the shadow will we work, and mould
The woman to the fuller day."

She spake
With kindled eyes: we rode a league beyond,
And, o'er a bridge of pinewood crossing, came
On flowery levels underneath the crag,
Full of all beauty. "O how sweet," I said
(For I was half-oblivious of my mask)
"To linger here with one that loved us."
"Yea," She answer'd, "or with fair philosophies
That lift the fancy; for indeed these fields
Are lovely, lovelier not the Elysian lawns,
Where paced the Demigods of old, and saw
The soft white vapour streak the crowned towers
Built to the Sun:" then, turning to her maids,
"Pitch our pavilion here upon the sward;
Lay out the viands." At the word, they raised
A tent of satin, elaborately wrought
With fair Corinna's triumph; here she stood,
Engirt with many a florid maiden-cheek,
The woman-conqueror; woman-conquer'd there
The bearded Victor of ten-thousand hymns,
And all the men mourn'd at his side: but we Set forth to climb; then, climbing, Cyril kept
With Psyche, with Melissa Florian, I
With mine affianced. Many a little hand
Glanced like a touch of sunshine on the rocks,
Many a light foot shone like a jewel set
In the dark crag: and then we turn’d, we wound
About the cliffs, the copses, out and in,
Hammering and clinking, chattering stony names
Of shale and hornblende, rag and trap and tuff,
Amygdaloid and trachyte, till the Sun
Grew broader toward his death and fell, and all
The rosy heights came out above the lawns.
PART IV

The splendour falls on castle walls
And snowy summits old in story:
The long light shakes across the lakes,
And the wild cataract leaps in glory.

Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O hark, O hear! how thin and clear,
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying:
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky,
They faint on hill or field or river:
Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow for ever and for ever.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
And answer, echoes, answer, dying, dying, dying.

"There sinks the nebulous star we call the Sun,
If that hypothesis of theirs be sound,"
Said Ida; "let us down and rest;" and we
Down from the lean and wrinkled precipices,
By every coppice-feathered chasm and cleft,
Dropt thro' the ambrosial gloom to where below
No bigger than a glow-worm shone the tent
Lamp-lit from the inner. Once she leaned on me,
Descending; once or twice she lent her hand,
And blissful palpitations in the blood,
Stirring a sudden transport rose and fell.

But when we planted level feet, and dipt
Beneath the satin dome and enter'd in,
There leaning deep in broider'd down we sank
Our elbows: on a tripod in the midst
A fragrant flame rose, and before us glow'd
Fruit, blossom, viand, amber wine, and gold.

Then she, "Let some one sing to us: lightlier move
The minutes fledged with music:" and a maid,
Of those beside her, smote her harp, and sang.

"Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy Autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more.

"Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail,
That brings our friends up from the underworld,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

"Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awaken'd birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

"Dear as remember'd kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feign'd
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
O Death in Life, the days that are no more.”

She ended with such passion that the tear,
She sang of, shook and fell, an erring pearl
Lost in her bosom: but with some disdain
Answer’d the Princess, “If indeed there haunt
About the moulder’d lodges of the Past
So sweet a voice and vague, fatal to men,
Well needs it we should cram our ears with wool
And so pace by: but thine are fancies hatch’d
In silken-folded idleness; nor is it
Wiser to weep a true occasion lost,
But trim our sails, and let old by-gones be,
While down the streams that float us each and all
To the issue, goes, like glittering bergs of ice,
Throne after throne, and molten on the waste
Becomes a cloud: for all things serve their time
Toward that great year of equal mights and rights,
Nor would I fight with iron laws, in the end
Found golden: let the past be past; let be
Their cancell’d Babels: tho’ the rough kex break
The starr’d mosaic, and the beard-blown goat
Hang on the shaft, and the wild fig-tree split
Their monstrous idols, care not while we hear
A trumpet in the distance pealing news
Of better, and Hope, a poising eagle, burns
Above the unrisen morrow:” then to me;
“Know you no song of your own land,” she said,
“Not such as moans about the retrospect,
But deals with the other distance and the hues
Of promise; not a death's-head at the wine."

Then I remember'd one myself had made,
What time I watched the swallow winging south
From mine own land, part made long since, and part
Now while I sang, and maidenlike as far
As I could ape their treble, did I sing.

"O Swallow, Swallow, flying, flying South,
Fly to her, and fall upon her gilded eaves,
And tell her, tell her, what I tell to thee.

"O tell her, Swallow, thou that knowest each,
That bright and fierce and fickle is the South,
And dark and true and tender is the North.

"O Swallow, Swallow, if I could follow, and light
Upon her lattice, I would pipe and trill
And cheep and twitter twenty million loves.

"O were I thou that she might take me in,
And lay me on her bosom, and her heart
Would rock the snowy cradle till I died.

"Why lingereth she to clothe her heart with love,
Delaying as the tender ash delays
To clothe herself, when all the woods are green?

"O tell her, Swallow, that thy brood is flown;
Say to her, I do but wanton in the South,
But in the North long since my nest is made.
"O tell her, brief is life but love is long,
And brief the sun of summer in the North,
And brief the moon of beauty in the South.

"O Swallow, flying from the golden woods,
Fly to her, and pipe and woo her, and make her mine
And tell her, tell her, that I follow thee."

I ceased, and all the ladies, each at each,
Like the Ithacensian suitors in old time,
Stared with great eyes, and laugh'd with alien lips,
And knew not what they meant; for still my voice
Rang false; but smiling "Not for thee," she said,

"O Bulbul, any rose of Gulistan
Shall burst her veil; marsh-divers, rather, maid,
Shall croak thee sister, or the meadow-crake
Grate her harsh kindred in the grass: and this
A mere love-poem! O for such, my friend,
We hold them slight: they mind us of the time
When we made bricks in Egypt. Knaves are men,
That lute and flute fantastic tenderness,
And dress the victim to the offering up.
And paint the gates of Hell with Paradise,
And play the slave to gain the tyranny.
Poor soul! I had a maid of honour once;
She wept her true eyes blind for such a one,
A rogue of cansonets and serenades.
I loved her. Peace be with her. She is dead.
So they blaspheme the muse! But great is song

120 Used to great ends: ourself have often tried
Valkyrian hymns, or into rhythm have dash'd
The passion of the prophetess; for song
Is duer unto freedom, force and growth
Of spirit than to junketing and love.

125 Love is it? Would this same mock-love, and this
Mock-Hymen were laid up like winter bats,
Till all men grew to rate us at our worth,
Not vassals to be beat, nor pretty babes
To be dandled, no, but living wills, and sphered

130 Whole in ourselves and owed to none. Enough!
But now to leaven play with profit, you,
Know you no song, the true growth of your soil,
That gives the manners of your countrywomen?"

She spoke and turn'd her sumptuous head with eyes

135 Of shining expectation fixt on mine.
Then while I dragged my brains for such a song,
Cyril, with whom the bell-mouth'd glass had wrought,
Or master'd by the sense of sport, began
To troll a careless, careless tavern-catch

140 Of Moll and Meg, and strange experiences
Unmeet for ladies. Florian nodded at him,
I frowning; Psyche flush'd and wann'd and shook;
The lilylike Melissa droop'd her brows;
"Forbear," the Princess cried; "Forbear, Sir," I;
And heated thro' and thro' with wrath and love,
I smote him on the breast; he started up;
There rose a shriek as of a city sack'd;
Melissa clamour'd, "Flee the death;" "To horse,"
Said Ida; "home! to horse!" and fled, as flies
A troop of snowy doves athwart the dusk,
When some one batters at the dovecot-doors,
Disorderly the women. Alone I stood
With Florian, cursing Cyril, vext at heart,
In the pavilion: there like parting hopes
I heard them passing from me: hoof by hoof,
And every hoof a knell to my desires,
Clang'd on the bridge; and then another shriek,
"The Head, the Head, the Princess, O the Head!"
For blind with rage she miss'd the plank, and roll'd
In the river. Out I sprang from glow to gloom:
There whirl'd her white robe like a blossom'd branch
Rapt to the horrible fall: a glance I gave,
No more; but woman-vested as I was,
Plunged; and the flood drew; yet I caught her;
then
Oaring one arm, and bearing in my left
The weight of all the hopes of half the world,
Strove to buffet to land in vain. A tree
Was half disrooted from his place and stoop'd
To drench his dark locks in the gurgling wave
Mid-channel. Right on this we drove and caught, And grasping down the boughs I gain'd the shore.

There stood her maidens glimmeringly group'd In the hollow bank. One reaching forward drew My burthen from mine arms; they cried "she lives."

They bore her back into the tent: but I, So much a kind of shame within me wrought, Not yet endured to meet her opening eyes, Not found my friends; but push'd alone on foot (For since her horse was lost I left her mine)

Across the woods, and less from Indian craft Than beelike instinct hiveward, found at length The garden portals. Two great statues, Art And Science, Caryatids, lifted up A weight of emblem, and betwixt were valves Of open-work in which the hunter rued His rash intrusion, manlike, but his brows Had sprouted, and the branches thereupon Spread out at top, and grimly spiked the gates.

A little space was left between the horns,

Thro' which I clamber'd o'er at top with pain, Dropt on the sward, and up the linden walks, And, tost on thoughts that changed from hue to hue, Now poring on the glow-worm, now the star, I paced the terrace, till the Bear had wheel'd Thro' a great arc his seven slow suns.
Of lightest echo, then a loftier form
Than female, moving thro' the uncertain gloom,
Disturb'd me with the doubt "if this were she,"
But it was Florian. "'Hist, O hist,'" he said,
"They seek us: out so late is out of rules.
Moreover 'seize the strangers' is the cry.
How came you here?" I told him: "I," said he,
"'Last of the train, a moral leper, I,
To whom none spake, half sick at heart, return'd.
Arriving all confused among the rest
With hooded brows I crept into the hall,
And, couch'd behind a Judith, underneath
The head of Holofernes, peep'd and saw.
Girl after girl was call'd to trial: each
Disclaim'd all knowledge of us: last of all,
Melissa: trust me, Sir, I pitied her.
She, question'd if she knew us men, at first
Was silent; closer prest, denied it not:
And then, demanded if her mother knew,
Or Psyche, she affirm'd not, or denied:
From whence the Royal mind, familiar with her,
Easily gather'd either guilt. She sent
For Psyche, but she was not there; she call'd
For Psyche's child to cast it from the doors;
She sent for Blanche to accuse her face to face;
And I slipt out: but whither will you now?
And where are Psyche, Cyril? both are fled:
What, if together? that were not so well.
Would rather we had never come! I dread
His wildness, and the chances of the dark.'"
"And yet," I said, "you wrong him more than I
That struck him: this is proper to the clown,
Tho' smock'd, or furr'd and purpled, still the clown,
To harm the thing that trusts him, and to shame
That which he says he loves: for Cyril, howe'er
He deal in frolic, as to-night—the song
Might have been worse and sinn'd in grosser lips
Beyond all pardon—as it is, I hold
These flashes on the surface are not he.

He has a solid base of temperament:
But as the waterlily starts and slides
Upon the level in little puffs of wind,
Tho' anchor'd to the bottom, such is he."

Scarce had I ceased when from a tamarisk near
Two Proctors leapt upon us, crying, "Names":
He, standing still, was clutch'd; but I began
To thrid the musky-circled mazes, wind
And double in and out the boles, and race
By all the fountains: fleet I was of foot:
Before me shower'd the rose in flakes; behind
I heard the puff'd pursuer; at mine ear
Bubbled the nightingale and heeded not,
And secret laughter tickled all my soul.
At last I hook'd my ankle in a vine,
That claspt the feet of a Mnemosyne,
And falling on my face was caught and known.

They haled us to the Princess where she sat
High in her hall: above her droop'd a lamp,
And made the single jewel on her brow
Burn like the mystic fire on a mast-head.

Prophet of storm: a handmaid on each side
Bow'd toward her, combing out her long black hair
Damp from the river; and close behind her stood
Eight daughters of the plough, stronger than men,
Huge women blowzed with health, and wind, and rain,
And labour. Each was like a Druid rock;
Or like a spire of land that stands apart
Cleft from the main, and wail'd about with mews.

Then, as we came, the crowd dividing clove
An advent to the throne: and there beside,
Half naked as if caught at once from bed
And tumbled on the purple footcloth, lay
The lily-shining child; and on the left,
Bow'd on her palms and folded up from wrong,
Her round white shoulder shaken with her sobs,
Melissa knelt; but Lady Blanche erect
Stood up and spake, an affluent orator.

"It was not thus, O Princess, in old days:
You prized my counsel, lived upon my lips:
I led you then to all the Castalies;
I fed you with the milk of every Muse;
I loved you like this kneeler, and you me
Your second mother: those were gracious times.
Then came your new friend: you began to change—
I saw it and grieved—to slacken and to cool;
Till taken with her seeming openness
You turn'd your warmer currents all to her,
To me you froze: this was my meed for all.
Yet I bore up in part from ancient love,
And partly that I hoped to win you back,
And partly conscious of my own deserts,
And partly that you were my civil head,
And chiefly you were born for something great,
In which I might your fellow-worker be,
When time should serve; and thus a noble scheme
Grew up from seed we two long since had sown;
In us true growth, in her a Jonah's gourd,
Up in one night and due to sudden sun:
We took this palace; but even from the first
You stood in your own light and darken'd mine.
What student came but that you planed her path
To Lady Psyche, younger, not so wise,
A foreigner, and I your countrywoman,
I your old friend and tried, she new in all?
But still her lists were swell'd and mine were lean;
Yet I bore up in hope she would be known:
Then came these wolves: they knew her: they endured,
Long-closeted with her the yestermorn,
To tell her what they were, and she to hear:
And me none told: not less to an eye like mine
A lidless watcher of the public weal,
Last night, their mask was patent, and my foot
Was to you: but I thought again: I fear'd
To meet a cold 'We thank you, we shall hear of it
From Lady Psyche:' you had gone to her,
She told, perforce; and winning easy grace,
No doubt, for slight delay, remain'd among us
In our young nursery still unknown, the stem
Less grain than touchwood, while my honest heat
Were all miscounted as malignant haste
To push my rival out of place and power.
But public use required she should be known;
And since my oath was ta'en for public use,
I broke the letter of it to keep the sense.
I spoke not then at first, but watch'd them well,
Saw that they kept apart, no mischief done;
And yet this day (tho' you should hate me for it)
I came to tell you; found that you had gone,
Ridd'n to the hills, she likewise: now, I thought,
That surely she will speak; if not, then I:
Did she? These monsters blazon'd what they were,
According to the coarseness of their kind,
For thus I hear; and known at last (my work)
And full of cowardice and guilty shame,
I grant in her some sense of shame, she flies;
And I remain on whom to wreak your rage,
I, that have lent my life to build up yours,
I that have wasted here health, wealth, and time,
And talent, I—you know it—I will not boast:
Dismiss me, and I prophesy your plan,
Divorced from my experience, will be chaff
For every gust of chance, and men will say
We did not know the real light, but chased
The wisp that flickers where no foot can tread."

She ceased: the Princess answer'd coldly.
"Good:
Your oath is broken: we dismiss you: go.
For this lost lamb (she pointed to the child)
Our mind is changed: we take it to ourself."

Thereat the Lady stretch'd a vulture throat,
And shot from crooked lips a haggard smile.
"The plan was mine. I built the nest," she said,
"To hatch the cuckoo. Rise!" and stoop'd to updrag
Melissa: she, half on her mother propt,
Half-drooping from her, turn'd her face, and cast
A liquid look on Ida, full of prayer,
Which melted Florian's fancy as she hung,
A Niobean daughter, one arm out,
Appealing to the bolts of Heaven; and while
We gazed upon her came a little stir
About the doors, and on a sudden rush'd
Among us, out of breath, as one pursued,
A woman-post in flying raiment. Fear
Stared in her eyes, and chalk'd her face, and wring'd
Her transit to the throne, whereby she fell
Delivering seal'd dispatches which the Head
Took half-amazed, and in her lion's mood
Tore open, silent we with blind surmise
Regarding, while she read, till over brow
And cheek and bosom brake the wrathful bloom
As of some fire against a stormy cloud,
When the wild peasant rights himself, the rick
Flames, and his anger reddens in the heavens;
For anger most it seem'd, while now her breast,
Beaten with some great passion at her heart,
Palpitated, her hand shook, and we heard
In the dead hush the papers that she held
Rustle: at once the lost lamb at her feet
Sent out a bitter bleating for its dam;
The plaintive cry jarr'd on her ire; she crush'd
The scrolls together, made a sudden turn
As if to speak, but, utterance failing her,
She whirl'd them on to me, as who should say
"Read," and I read—two letters—one her sire's.

"Fair daughter, when we sent the Prince your way
We knew not your ungracious laws, which learnt,
We, conscious of what temper you are built,
Came all in haste to hinder wrong, but fell
Into his father's hands, who has this night,
You lying close upon his territory,
Slip't round and in the dark invested you,
And here he keeps me hostage for his son."

The second was my father's running thus:
"You have our son: touch not a hair of his head:
Render him up unscathed: give him your hand:
Cleave to your contract: tho' indeed we hear
You hold the woman is the better man;
A rampant heresy, such as if it spread
Would make all women kick against their Lords
Thro' all the world, and which might well deserve
That we this night should pluck your palace down;
And we will do it, unless you send us back
Our son, on the instant, whole."

So far I read;

And then stood up and spoke impetuously.

"O not to pry and peer on your reserve,
But led by golden wishes and a hope
The child of regal compact, did I break
Your precinct: not a scorn of your sex
But venerator, zealous it should be
All that it might be: hear me, for I bear,
Tho' man, yet human, whatso'er your wrongs,
From the flaxen curl to the gray lock a life
Less mine than yours: my nurse would tell me of you;
I babbled for you, as babies for the moon,
Vague brightness; when a boy, you stoop'd to me
From all high places, lived in all fair lights,
Came in long breezes rapt from inmost south
And blown to inmost north; at eve and dawn
With Ida, Ida, Ida, rang the woods;
The leader wildswan in among the stars
Would clang it, and lapt in wreaths of glowworm light
The mellow breaker murmur'd Ida. Now,
Because I would have reach'd you, had you been
Sphered up with Cassiopēa, or the enthroned
Persephone in Hades, now at length,
Those winters of abeyance all worn out,
A man I came to see you: but, indeed,
Not in this frequence can I lend full tongue,
O noble Ida, to those thoughts that wait
On you, their centre: let me say but this,
That many a famous man and woman, town
And landskip, have I heard of, after seen
The dwarfs of presage: tho' when known, there grew
Another kind of beauty in detail
Made them worth knowing; but in you I found
My boyish dream involved and dazzled down
And master'd, while that after-beauty makes
Such head from act to act, from hour to hour,
Within me, that except you slay me here,
According to your bitter statute-book,
I cannot cease to follow you, as they say
The seal does music; who desire you more
Than growing boys their manhood; dying lips,
With many thousand matters left to do,
The breath of life; O more than poor men wealth,
Than sick men health—yours, yours, not mine—
 but half
Without you; with you, whole; and of those halves
You worthiest; and howe'er you block and bar
Your heart with system out from mine, I hold
That it becomes no man to nurse despair,
But in the teeth of clench'd antagonisms
To follow up the worthiest till he die:
Yet that I came not all unauthorised
Behold your father's letter."

On one knee
Kneeling, I gave it, which she caught, and dash'd
Unopen'd at her feet: a tide of fierce
Invective seem'd to wait behind her lips,
As waits a river level with the dam
Ready to burst and flood the world with foam:
And so she would have spoken, but there rose
A hubbub in the court of half the maids
Gather'd together: from the illumined hall
Long lanes of splendour slanted o'er a press
Of snowy shoulders, thick as herded ewes,
And rainbow robes, and gems and gemlike eyes,
And gold and golden heads; they to and fro
Fluctuated, as flowers in storm, some red, some pale,
All open-mouth'd, all gazing to the light,
Some crying there was an army in the land,
And some that men were in the very walls,
And some they cared not; till a clamour grew
As of a new-world Babel, woman-built,
And worse-confounded: high above them stood
The placid marble Muses, looking peace.

Not peace she look'd, the Head: but rising up
Robed in the long night of her deep hair, so
To the open window moved, remaining there
Fixt like a beacon-tower above the waves
Of tempest, when the crimson-rolling eye
Glares ruin, and the wild birds on the light
Dash themselves dead. She stretch’d her arms and call’d
Across the tumult and the tumult fell.

"What fear ye, brawlers? am not I your Head?
On me, me, me, the storm first breaks: I dare
All these male thunderbolts: what is it ye fear?
Peace! there are those to avenge us and they come:
If not,—myself were like enough, O girls,
To unfurl the maiden banner of our rights,
And clad in iron burst the ranks of war,
Or, falling, protomartyr of our cause,
Die: yet I blame you not so much for fear;
Six thousand years of fear have made you that
From which I would redeem you: but for those
That stir this hubbub—you and you—I know
Your faces there in the crowd—to-morrow morn
We hold a great convention: then shall they
That love their voices more than duty, learn
With whom they deal, dismiss’d in shame to live
No wiser than their mothers, household stuff,
Live chattels, mincers of each other’s fame,
Full of weak poison, turnspits for the clown,
The drunkard’s football, laughing-stocks of Time,
Whose brains are in their hands and in their heels,
But fit to flaunt, to dress, to dance, to thrum,
To tramp, to scream, to burnish, and to scour,
For ever slaves at home and fools abroad."

She, ending, waved her hands: thereat the crowd
Muttering, dissolved: then with a smile, that look'd
A stroke of cruel sunshine on the cliff,
When all the glens are drown'd in azure gloom
Of thunder-shower, she floated to us and said:

"You have done well and like a gentleman,
And like a Prince: you have our thanks for all:
And you look well too in your woman's dress:
Well have you done and like a gentleman.
You saved our life: we owe you bitter thanks:
Better have died and spilt our bones in the flood—
Than men had said—but now—What hinders me
To take such bloody vengeance on you both?—
Yet since our father—Wasps in our good hive,
You would-be quenchers of the light to be,
Barbarians, grosser than your native bears—
O would I had his sceptre for one hour!
You that have dared to break our bound, and gull'd
Our servants, wrong'd and lied and thwarted us—
I wed with thee! I bound by precontract
Your bride, your bondslave! not tho' all the gold
That veins the world were pack'd to make your crown,
And every spoken tongue should lord you. Sir,
Your falsehood and yourself are hateful to us:
I trample on your offers and on you:
Begone: we will not look upon you more.
Here, push them out at gates.''

In wrath she spake.
Then those eight mighty daughters of the plough
Bent their broad faces toward us and address'd
Their motion: twice I sought to plead my cause,
But on my shoulder hung their heavy hands,
The weight of destiny: so from her face
They push'd us, down the steps, and thro' the court,
And with grim laughter thrust us out at gates.

We cross'd the street and gain'd a petty mound
Beyond it, whence we saw the lights and heard
The voices murmuring. While I listen'd, came
On a sudden the weird seizure and the doubt:
I seem'd to move among a world of ghosts;
The Princess with her monstrous woman-guard,
The jest and earnest working side by side,
The cataract and the tumult and the kings
Were shadows; and the long fantastic night
With all its doings had and had not been,
And all things were and were not.

This went by
As strangely as it came, and on my spirits
Settled a gentle cloud of melancholy;
Not long; I shook it off; for spite of doubts
And sudden ghostly shadowing I was one
To whom the touch of all mischance but came
As night to him that sitting on a hill
Sees the midsummer, midnight, Norway sun
Set into sunrise; then we moved away.

INTERLUDE

Thy voice is heard thro' rolling drums,
That beat to battle where he stands;
Thy face across his fancy comes,
And gives the battle to his hands:

A moment, while the trumpets blow,
He sees his brood about thy knee;
The next, like fire he meets the foe,
And strikes him dead for thine and thee.

So Lilia sang: we thought her half-possess'd,
She struck such warbling fury thro' the word;
And, after, feigning pique at what she call'd
The raillery, or grotesque, or false sublime—
Like one that wishes at a dance to change
The music—clapt her hands and cried for war,
Or some grand fight to kill and make an end:
And he that next inherited the tale
Half-turning to the broken statue, said,
"Sir Ralph has got your colours: if I prove
Your knight, and fight your battle, what for me?"

It chanced, her empty glove upon the tomb
Lay by her like a model of her hand.
She took it and she flung it. "Fight," she said, "And make us all we would be, great and good."
He knightlike in his cap instead of casque,
A cap of Tyrol borrow'd from the hall,
Arranged the favour, and assumed the Prince.
PART V

Now, scarce three paces measured from the mound,
We stumbled on a stationary voice,
And "Stand, who goes?" "Two from the palace," I.
"The second two: they wait," he said, "pass on;
His Highness wakes:" and one, that clash'd in arms,
By glimmering lanes and walls of canvas led
Threading the soldier-city, till we heard
The drowsy folds of our great ensign shake
From blazon'd lions o'er the imperial tent
Whispers of war.

Entering, the sudden light
Dazed me half-blind: I stood and seem'd to hear,
As in a poplar grove when a light wind wakes
A lisping of the innumerous leaf and dies,
Each hissing in his neighbour's ear; and then
A strangled titter, out of which there brake
On all sides, clamouring etiquette to death,
Unmeasured mirth; while now the two old kings
Began to wag their baldness up and down,
The fresh young captains flash'd their glittering teeth,
The huge bush-bearded Barons heaved and blew,
And slain with laughter roll'd the gilded Squire.
At length my Sire, his rough cheek wet with tears,
Panted from weary sides, "King, you are free!
We did but keep you surety for our son,
If this be he,—or a draggled mawkin, thou,
That tends her bristled grun ters in the sludge:"
For I was drench'd with ooze, and torn with briers,
More crumpled than a poppy from the sheath,
And all one rag, disprinced from head to heel.
Then some one sent beneath his vaulted palm
A whisper'd jest to some one near him, "Look,
He has been among his shadows." "Satan take
The old women and their shadows! (thus the King
Roar'd) make yourself a man to fight with men.
Go: Cyril told us all."

As boys that slink
From ferule and the trespass-chiding eye,
Away we stole, and transient in a trice
From what was left of faded woman-slough
To sheathing splendours and the golden scale
Of harness, issued in the sun, that now
Leapt from the dewy shoulders of the Earth,
And hit the Northern hills. Here Cyril met us.
A little shy at first, but by and by
We twain, with mutual pardon ask'd and given
For stroke and song, resolder'd peace, whereon
Follow'd his tale. Amazed he fled away
Thro' the dark land, and later in the night
Had come on Psyche weeping: "then we fell
Into your father's hand, and there she lies,
But will not speak, nor stir."

He show'd a tent
A stone-shot off: we enter'd in, and there
Among piled arms and rough accoutrements,
Pitiful sight, wrapp'd in a soldier's cloak,
Like some sweet sculpture draperd from head to foot,
And push'd by rude hands from its pedestal,
All her fair length upon the ground she lay:
And at her head a follower of the camp,
A charr'd and wrinkled piece of womanhood,
Sat watching like a watcher by the dead.

Then Florian knelt, and "Come," he whisper'd to her,
"Lift up your head, sweet sister: lie not thus.
What have you done but right? you could not slay
Me, nor your prince: look up: be comforted:
Sweet is it to have done the thing one ought,
When fall'n in darker ways." And likewise I:
"Be comforted: have I not lost her too,
In whose least act abides the nameless charm
That none have else for me?" She heard, she moved,
She moan'd, a folded voice; and up she sat,
And raised the cloak from brows as pale and smooth
As those that mourn half-shrouded over death
In deathless marble. "Her," she said, "my friend—
Parted from her—betray'd her cause and mine—
Where shall I breathe? why kept ye not your faith?
O base and bad! what comfort? none for me!''

To whom remorseful Cyril, "Yet I pray
Take comfort: live, dear lady, for your child!"
At which she lifted up her voice and cried.

"'Ah me, my babe, my blossom, ah, my child,
My one sweet child, whom I shall see no more!
For now will cruel Ida keep her back;
And either she will die from want of care,
Or sicken with ill-usage, when they say
The child is hers—for every little fault,
The child is hers; and they will beat my girl
Remembering her mother: O my flower!
Or they will take her, they will make her hard,
And she will pass me by in after-life
With some cold reverence worse than were sh dead.

Ill mother that I was to leave her there,
To lag behind, scared by the cry they made,
The horror of the shame among them all:
But I will go and sit beside the doors,
And make a wild petition night and day,
Until they hate to hear me like a wind
Wailing for ever, till they open to me,
And lay my little blossom at my feet,
My babe, my sweet Aglaïa, my one child:
And I will take her up and go my way,
And satisfy my soul with kissing her:"
Ah! what might that man not deserve of me
Who gave me back my child?" "Be comforted,"
Said Cyril, "you shall have it;" but again
She veil'd her brows, and prone she sank, and so
Like tender things that being caught feign death:
Spoke not, nor stirr'd.

By this a murmur ran
Thro' all the camp and inward raced the scouts
With rumour of Prince Arac hard at hand.
We left her by the woman, and without Found the gray kings at parle: and "Look you," cried
My father, "that our compact be fulfill'd:
You have spoilt this child; she laughs at you and man:
She wrongs herself, her sex, and me, and him:
But red-faced war has rods of steel and fire;
She yields, or war."

Then Gama turn'd to me:
"We fear, indeed, you spent a stormy time
With our strange girl: and yet they say that still
You love her. Give us, then, your mind at large:
How say you, war or not?"

"Not war, if possible,
O king," I said, "lest from the abuse of war,
The desecrated shrine, the trampled year,
The smouldering homestead, and the household flower
'Torn from the lintel—all the common wrong—
A smoke go up thro' which I loom to her
Three times a monster: now she lightens scorn
At him that mars her plan, but then would hate
(And every voice she talk'd with ratify it,
And every face she look'd on justify it)
The general foe. More soluble is this knot,
By gentleness than war. I want her love.
What were I nigher this altho' we dash'd
Your cities into shards with catapults,
She would not love;—or brought her chain'd, a slave,
The lifting of whose eyelash is my lord,
Not ever would she love; but brooding turn
The book of scorn, till all my flitting chance
Were caught within the record of her wrongs,
And crush'd to death: and rather, Sire, than this
I would the old God of war himself were dead,
Forgotten, rusting on his iron hills,
Rotting on some wild shore with ribs of wreck,
Or like an old-world mammoth bulk'd in ice,
Not to be molten out."

And roughly spake
My father, "Tut, you know them not, the girls.
Boy, when I hear you prate I almost think
That idiot legend credible. Look you, Sir!
Man is the hunter; woman is his game:
The sleek and shining creatures of the chase,
We hunt them for the beauty of their skins;
They love us for it, and we ride them down.
Wheedling and siding with them! Out! for shame!"
Boy, there's no rose that's half so dear to them
As he that does the thing they dare not do,
Breathing and sounding beauteous battle, comes
With the air of the trumpet round him, and leaps in
Among the women, snares them by the score
Flatter'd and fluster'd, wins, tho' dash'd with death
He redens what he kisses: thus I won
Your mother, a good mother, a good wife,
Worth winning; but this firebrand—gentleness
To such as her! if Cyril spake her true,
To catch a dragon in a cherry net,
To trip a tigress with a gossamer,
Were wisdom to it.''

"Yea but Sire," I cried,
"Wild natures need wise curbs. The soldier? No:
What dares not Ida do that she should prize
The soldier? I beheld her, when she rose
The yesternight, and storming in extremes,
Stood for her cause, and flung defiance down
Gagelike to man, and had not shunn'd the death,
No, not the soldier's: yet I hold her, king,
True woman: but you clash them all in one,
That have as many differences as we.
The violet varies from the lily as far
As oak from elm: one loves the soldier, one
The silken priest of peace, one this, one that,
And some unworthily; their sinless faith,
A maiden moon that sparkles on a sty,
Glorifying clown and satyr; whence they need
More breadth of culture: is not Ida right?
They worth it? truer to the law within?
Severer in the logic of a life?
Twice as magnetic to sweet influences
Of earth and heaven? and she of whom you speak,
My mother, looks as whole as some serene
Creation minted in the golden moods
Of sovereign artists; not a thought, a touch,
But pure as lines of green that streak the white
Of the first snowdrop's inner leaves; I say,
Not like the piebald miscellany, man,
Bursts of great heart and slips in sensual mire,
But whole and one: and take them all-in-all,
Were we ourselves but half as good, as kind,
As truthful, much that Ida claims as right
Had ne'er been mooted, but as frankly theirs
As dues of Nature. To our point: not war:
Lest I lose all."

"'Nay, nay, you spake but sense,'"
Said Gama. "'We remember love ourself
In our sweet youth; we did not rate him then
This red-hot iron to be shaped with blows.
You talk almost like Ida: she can talk;
And there is something in it as you say:
But you talk kindlier: we esteem you for it.—
He seems a gracious and a gallant Prince,
I would he had our daughter: for the rest,
Our own detention, why, the causes weigh'd,
Fatherly fears—you used us courteously—
We would do much to gratify your Prince—
We pardon it; and for your ingress here

Upon the skirt and fringe of our fair land,
You did but come as goblins in the night,
Nor in the furrow broke the ploughman’s head,
Nor burnt the grange, nor buss’d the milking-maid,
Nor robb’d the farmer of his bowl of cream:

But let your Prince (our royal word upon it,
He comes back safe) ride with us to our lines,
And speak with Arac: Arac’s word is thrice
As ours with Ida: something may be done—
I know not what—and ours shall see us friends.

You, likewise, our late guests, if so you will Follow us: who knows? we four may build some plan
Foursquare to opposition.”

Here he reach’d
White hands of farewell to my sire, who growl’d
An answer which, half-muffled in his beard,

Let so much out as gave us leave to go.

Then rode we with the old king across the lawns
Beneath huge trees, a thousand rings of Spring
In every bole, a song on every spray
Of birds that piped their Valentines, and woke

Desire in me to infuse my tale of love
In the old king’s ears, who promised help, and oozed
All o’er with honey’d answer as we rode
And blossom-fragrant slipt the heavy dews
Gather'd by night and peace with each light air
On our mail'd heads: but other thoughts than peace
Burnt in us, when we saw the embattled squares,
And squadrons of the Prince, trampling the flowers
With clamour: for among them rose a cry
As if to greet the king; they made a halt;
The horses yell'd; they clash'd their arms; the drum
Beat; merrily-blowing shrill'd the martial fife;
And in the blast and bray of the long horn
And serpent-throated bugle, undulated
The banner: anon to meet us lightly pranced
Three captains out; nor ever had I seen
Such thews of men: the midmost and the highest
Was Araç; all about his motion clung
The shadow of his sister, as the beam
Of the East, that play'd upon them, made them glance
Like those three stars of the airy Giant's zone,
That glitter burnish'd by the frosty dark;
And as the fiery Sirius alters hue,
And bickers into red and emerald, shone
Their morions, wash'd with morning, as they came.

And I that prated peace, when first I heard
War-music, felt the blind wildbeast of force,
Whose home is in the sinews of a man,
Stir in me as to strike: then took the king
His three broad sons; with now a wandering hand
And now a pointed finger, told them all:
A common light of smiles at our disguise
Broke from their lips, and, ere the windy jest
Had labour'd down within his ample lungs,
The genial giant, Arac, roll'd himself
Thrice in the saddle, then burst out in words.

"Our land invaded, 'sdeath! and he himself
Your captive, yet my father wills not war:
And, 'sdeath! myself, what care I, war or no?
But then this question of your troth remains:
And there's a downright honest meaning in her;
She flies too high, she flies too high! and yet
She ask'd but space and fairplay for her scheme;
She prest and prest it on me—I myself,
What know I of these things? but, life and soul!
I thought her half-right talking of her wrongs;
I say she flies too high, 'sdeath! what of that?
I take her for the flower of womankind,
And so I often told her, right or wrong,
And, Prince, she can be sweet to those she loves,
And, right or wrong, I care not: this is all,
I stand upon her side: she made me swear it—
'Sdeath!—and with solemn rites by candle-light—
Swear by St. something—I forget her name—
Her that talk'd down the fifty wisest men;
She was a princess too; and so I swore.
Come, this is all; she will not: waive your claim:
If not, the foughten field, what else, at once
Decides it, 'sdeath! against my father's will.'"

I lagg'd in answer, loth to render up
My precontract, and loth by brainless war
To cleave the rift of difference deeper yet;
Till one of those two brothers, half aside
And fingerling at the hair about his lip,
To prick us on to combat "Like to like!
The woman's garment hid the woman's heart."
A taunt that clench'd his purpose like a blow!
For fiery-short was Cyril's counter-scoff,
And sharp I answer'd, touch'd upon the point
Where idle boys are cowards to their shame,
"Decide it here: why not? we are three to three."

Then spake the third, "But three to three? no more?
"No more, and in our noble sister's cause?
More, more, for honour: every captain waits
Hungry for honour, angry for his king.
More, more, some fifty on a side, that each
May breathe himself, and quick! by overthrow
Of these or those, the question settled die."
"Yea," answer'd I, "for this wild wreath of air,
This flake of rainbow flying on the highest
Foam of men's deeds—this honour, if ye will.
It needs must be for honour if at all:
Since, what decision? if we fail, we fail,
And if we win, we fail: she would not keep
Her compact."  "'Sdeath! but we will send to her," 315 Said Arac, "worthy reasons why she should
Bide by this issue: let our missive thro'
And you shall have her answer by the word."

"'Boys!'" shrieked the old king, but vainlier than a hen
To her false daughters in the pool; for none
Regarded; neither seem'd there more to say:
Back rode we to my father's camp, and found
He thrice had sent a herald to the gates,
To learn if Ida yet would cede our claim,
Or by denial flush her babbling wells
With her own people's life: three times he went:
The first, he blew and blew, but none appear'd:
He batter'd at the doors; none came: the next,
An awful voice within had warn'd him thence:
The third, and those eight daughters of the plough
Came sallying thro' the gates, and caught his hair,
And so belabor'd him on rib and cheek
They made him wild: not less one glance he caught
Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there
Unshaken, clinging to her purpose, firm
Tho' compass'd by two armies and the noise
Of arms; and standing like a stately Pine
Set in a cataract on an island-crag,
When storm is on the heights, and right and left
Suck'd from the dark heart of the long hills roll
The torrents, dash'd to the vale: and yet her will
Bred will in me to overcome it or fall.

But when I told the king that I was pledged
To fight in tourney for my bride, he clash'd
His iron palms together with a cry;
Himself would tilt it out among the lads:
But overborne by all his bearded lords
With reasons drawn from age and state, perforce
He yielded, wroth and red, with fierce demur:
And many a bold knight started up in heat,
And sware to combat for my claim till death.

All on this side the palace ran the field
Flat to the garden-wall: and likewise here,
Above the garden's glowing blossom-belts,
A column'd entry shone and marble stairs,
And great bronze valves, emboss'd with Tomyris
And what she did to Cyrus after fight,
But now fast barr'd: so here upon the flat
All that long morn the lists were hammer'd up,
And all that morn the heralds to and fro,
With message and defiance, went and came;
Last, Ida's answer, in a royal hand,
But shaken here and there, and rolling words
Oration-like. I kiss'd it and I read.

"O brother, you have known the pangs we felt,
What heats of indignation when we heard
Of those that iron-cramp'd their women's feet;
Of lands in which at the altar the poor bride
Gives her harsh groom for bridal-gift a scourge;
Of living hearts that crack within the fire
Where smoulder their dead despots; and of those,—
Mothers,—that, all prophetic pity, fling
Their pretty maids in the running flood, and swoops
The vulture, beak and talon, at the heart
Made for all noble motion: and I saw
That equal baseness lived in sleeker times
With smoother men: the old leaven leaven'd all:
Millions of throats would bawl for civil rights,
No woman named: therefore I set my face
Against all men, and lived but for mine own.
Far off from men I built a fold for them:
I stored it full of rich memorial:
I fenced it round with gallant institutes,
And biting laws to scare the beasts of prey
And prosper'd; till a rout of saucy boys
Brake on us at our books, and marr'd our peace,
Mask'd like our maids, blustering I know not what
Of insolence and love, some pretext held
Of baby troth, invalid, since my will
Seal'd not the bond—the striplings!—for their sport!—
I tamed my leopards: shall I not tame these?
Or you? or I? for since you think me touch'd
In honour—what, I would not aught of false—
Is not our cause pure? and whereas I know
Your prowess, Arac, and what mother's blood
You draw from, fight; you failing, I abide
What end soever: fail you will not. Still
Take not his life: he risk'd it for my own;
His mother lives: yet whatsoever you do,
Fight and fight well; strike and strike home. O
dear
Brothers, the woman's Angel guards you, you
The sole men to be mingled with our cause,
The sole men we shall prize in the aftertime,
Your very armour hallow'd, and your statues
Rear'd, sung to, when, this gad-fly brush'd aside,
We plant a solid foot into the Time,
And mould a generation strong to move
With claim on claim from right to right, till she Whose name is yoked with children's, know herself;
And Knowledge in our own land make her free,
And, ever following those two crowned twins,
Commerce and conquest, shower the fiery grain
Of freedom broadcast over all that orbs
Between the Northern and the Southern morn."

Then came a postscript dash'd across the rest.
"See that there be no traitors in your camp:
We seem a nest of traitors—none to trust
Since our arms fail'd—this Egypt-plague of men!
Almost our maids were better at their homes,
Than thus man-girdled here: indeed I think
Our chiefest comfort is the little child
Of one unworthy mother; which she left:
She shall not have it back: the child shall grow
To prize the authentic mother of her mind.
I took it for an hour in mine own bed
This morning: there the tender orphan hands
Felt at my heart, and seem'd to charm from thence
The wrath I nurs'd against the world: farewell.''

I ceased; he said, "Stubborn, but she may sit
Upon a king's right hand in thunderstorms,
And breed up warriors! See now, tho' yourself
Be dazzled by the wildfire Love to sloughs
That swallow common sense, the spindling king,
This Gama swamp'd in lazy tolerance.
When the man wants weight, the woman takes it up,
And topples down the scales; but this is fixt
As are the roots of earth and base of all;
Man for the field and woman for the hearth:
Man for the sword and for the needle she:
Man with the head and woman with the heart:
Man to command and woman to obey;
All else confusion. Look you! the gray mare
Is ill to live with, when her whinny shrills
From tile to scullery, and her small goodman
Shrinks in his armchair while the fires of Hell
Mix with his hearth: but you—she's yet a colt—
Take, break her: strongly groom'd and straitly curb'd
She might not rank with those detestable
That let the bantling scald at home, and brawl
Their rights or wrongs like potherbs in the street.
They say she's comely; there's the fairer chance:
I like her none the less for rating at her!
Besides, the woman wed is not as we,
But suffers change of frame. A lusty brace
Of twins may weed her of her folly. Boy,
The bearing and the training of a child
Is woman's wisdom.''

Thus the hard old king:
I took my leave, for it was nearly noon:
I pored upon her letter which I held,
And on the little clause "take not his life:"
I mused on that wild morning in the woods,
And on the "Follow, follow, thou shalt win:"
I thought on all the wrathful king had said,
And how the strange betrothment was to end:
Then I remember'd that burnt sorcerer's curse
That one should fight with shadows and should fall;
And like a flash the weird affection came:
King, camp and college turn'd to hollow shows;
I seem'd to move in old memorial tilts,
And doing battle with forgotten ghosts,
To dream myself the shadow of a dream:
And ere I woke it was the point of noon,
The lists were ready. Empanoplied and plumed
We enter'd in, and waited, fifty there
Opposed to fifty, till the trumpet blared
At the barrier like a wild horn in a land
Of echoes, and a moment, and once more
The trumpet, and again: at which the storm
Of galloping hoofs bare on the ridge of spears
And riders front to front, until they closed
In conflict with the crash of shivering points,
And thunder. Yet it seem’d a dream, I dream’d
Of fighting. On his haunches rose the steed,
And into fiery splinters leapt the lance,
And out of stricken helmets sprang the fire.
Part sat like rocks: part reel’d but kept their seats:
Part roll’d on the earth and rose again and drew:
Part stumbled mixt with floundering horses.

Down
From those two bulks at Arac’s side, and down
From Arac’s arm, as from a giant’s flail,
The large blows rain’d, as here and everywhere
He rode the mellay, lord of the ringing lists,
And all the plain,—brand, mace, and shaft, and shield,—
Shock’d, like an iron-clanging anvil bang’d
With hammers; till I thought, can this be he
From Gama’s dwarfish loins? if this be so,
The mother makes us most—and in my dream
I glanced aside, and saw the palace-front
Alive with fluttering scarfs and ladies’ eyes,
And highest, among the statues, statue-like,
Between a cymbal’d Miriam and a Jael,
With Psyche’s babe, was Ida watching us,
A single band of gold about her hair,
Like a Saint’s glory up in heaven: but she
No saint—inexorable—no tenderness—
Too hard, too cruel: yet she sees me fight,
Yea, let her see me fall! with that I drave
Among the thickest and bore down a Prince,
And Cyril, one. Yea, let me make my dream
All that I would. But that large-moulded man,
His visage all agrin as at a wake,
Made at me thro’ the press, and, staggering back
With stroke on stroke the horse and horseman, came
As comes a pillar of electric cloud,
Flaying the roofs and sucking up the drains,
And shadowing down the champaign till it strikes
On a wood, and takes, and breaks, and cracks; and splits,
And twists the grain with such a roar that Earth
Reels, and the herdsmen cry; for everything
Gave way before him: only Florian, he
That loved me closer than his own right eye,
Thrust in between; but Arac rode him down:
And Cyril seeing it, push’d against the Prince,
With Psyche’s colour round his helmet, tough,
Strong, supple, sinew-corded, apt at arms;
But tougher, heavier, stronger, he that smote
And threw him: last I spurr’d; I felt my veins
Stretch with fierce heat; a moment hand to hand,
And sword to sword, and horse to horse we hung,
Till I struck out and shouted; the blade glanced,
I did but sheer a feather, and dream and truth
Flow’d from me; darkness closed me; and I fell.
PART VI

Home they brought her warrior dead:
She nor swoon'd, nor utter'd cry:
All her maidens, watching, said,
"She must weep or she will die."

Then they praised him, soft and low,
Call'd him worthy to be loved,
Truest friend and noblest foe;
Yet she neither spoke nor moved.

Stole a maiden from her place,
Lightly to the warrior stept,
Took the face-cloth from the face;
Yet she neither moved nor wept.

Rose a nurse of ninety years,
Set his child upon her knee—
Like summer tempest came her tears—
"Sweet, my child, I live for thee."

My dream had never died or lived again.
As in some mystic middle state I lay;
Seeing I saw not, hearing not I heard:
Tho', if I saw not, yet they told me all
So often that I speak as having seen.

For so it seem'd, or so they said to me,
That all things grew more tragic and more strange;
That when our side was vanquish'd and my cause
Forever lost, there went up a great cry,
The Prince is slain. My father heard and ran
In on the lists, and there unlaced my casque
And grovell'd on my body, and after him
Came Psyche, sorrowing for Aglaïa.

But high upon the palace Ida stood
With Pycke’s babe in arm: there on the roofs
Like that great dame of Lapidoth she sang.

“Our enemies have fall’n, have fall’n: the seed,
The little seed they laughed at in the dark,
Has risen and cleft the soil, and grown a bulk
Of spanless girth, that lays on every side
A thousand arms and rushes to the Sun.

“Our enemies have fall’n, have fall’n: they came,
The leaves were wet with women’s tears: they heard
The noise of songs they would not understand:
They mark’d it with the red cross to the fall,
And would have strown it, and are fall’n themselves.

“Our enemies have fall’n, have fall’n: they came,
The woodmen with their axes: lo the tree!
But we will make it faggots for the hearth,
And shape it plank and beam for roof and floor,
And boats and bridges for the use of men.

“Our enemies have fall’n, have fall’n; they struck,
With their own blows they hurt themselves, nor knew
There dwelt an iron nature in the grain:
The glittering axe was broken in their arms,
Their arms were shatter’d to the shoulder blade.

“Our enemies have fall’n, but this shall grow
A night of Summer from the heat, a breadth
Of Autumn, dropping fruits of power: and roll’d
With music in the growing breeze of Time,
The tops shall strike from star to star, the fangs
Shall move the stony bases of the world.
"And now, O maids, behold our sanctuary
Is violate, our laws broken: fear we not
To break them more in their behoof, whose arms
Champion'd our cause and won it with a day
Blanch'd in our annals, and perpetual feast,
When dames and heroines of the golden year
Shall strip a hundred hollows bare of Spring,
To rain an April of ovation round
Their statues, borne aloft, the three: but come,
We will be liberal, since our rights are won.
Let them not lie in the tents with coarse mankind,
Ill nurses; but descend, and proffer these
The brethren of our blood and cause, that there
Lie bruised and maim'd, the tender ministries
Of female hands and hospitality."

She spoke, and with the babe yet in her arms,
Descending, burst the great bronze valves, and led
A hundred maids in train across the Park.
Some cowl’d, and some bare-headed, on they came,
Their feet in flowers, her loveliest: by them went
The enamour’d air sighing, and on their curls
From the high tree the blossom wavering fell,
And over them the tremulous isles of light
Slided, they moving under shade: but Blanche
At distance follow’d: so they came: anon’
Thro’ open field into the lists they wound
Timorously; and as the leader of the herd
That holds a stately fretwork to the Sun,
And follow’d up by a hundred airy does,
Steps with a tender foot, light as on air,
That lovely, lordly creature floated on
To where her wounded brethren lay; there stay'd;
Knelt on one knee,—the child on one,—and prest
Their hands, and call'd them dear deliverers,
And happy warriors, and immortal names,
And said: "You shall not lie in the tents but here,
And nursed by those for whom you fought, and served
With female hands and hospitality."

Then, whether moved by this, or was it chance,
She past my way. Up started from my side
The old lion, glaring with his whelpless eye,
Silent; but when she saw me lying stark,
Dishelm'd and mute, and motionlessly pale,
Cold ev'n to her, she sigh'd; and when she saw
The haggard father's face and reverend beard
Of grisly twine, all dabbled with the blood
Of his own son, shudder'd, a twitch of pain
Tortured her mouth, and o'er her forehead past
A shadow, and her hue changed, and she said:
"He saved my life: my brother slew him for it."
No more: at which the king in bitter scorn
Drew from my neck the painting and the tress,
And held them up: she saw them, and a day
Rose from the distance on her memory,
When the good Queen, her mother, shore the tress
With kisses, ere the days of Lady Blanche:
And then once more she looked at my pale face:
Till understanding all the foolish work
Of Fancy, and the bitter close of all,
Her iron will was broken in her mind;
Her noble heart was molten in her breast;
She bow'd, she set the child on the earth; she laid
A feeling finger on my brows, and presently
"O Sire," she said, "he lives: he is not dead:
O let me have him with my brethren here
In our own palace: we will tend on him
Like one of these; if so, by any means,
To lighten this great clog of thanks, that make
Our progress falter to the woman's goal.'"

She said: but at the happy word "he lives,"
My father stoop'd, refather'd o'er my wounds.
So those two foes above my fallen life,
With brow to brow like night and evening mixt
Their dark and gray, while Psyche ever stole
A little nearer, till the babe that by us,
Half-lapt in glowing gauze and golden brede,
Lay like a new-fall'n meteor on the grass,
Uncar'd for, spied its mother and began
A blind and babbling laughter, and to dance
Its body, and reach its fatling innocent arms
And lazy lingering fingers. She the appeal
Brook'd not, but clamouring out, "Mine—mine—
not yours,
It is not yours, but mine: give me the child,"
Ceased all on tremble: piteous was the cry:
So stood the unhappy mother open-mouth'd,
And turn'd each face her way: wan was her cheek
With hollow watch, her blooming mantle torn,
Red grief and mother's hunger in her eye,
And down dead-heavy sank her curls, and half
The sacred mother's bosom, panting, burst
The laces toward her babe; but she nor cared
Nor knew it, clamouring on, till Ida heard,
Look'd up, and rising slowly from me, stood
Erect and silent, striking with her glance
The mother, me, the child; but he that lay
Beside us, Cyril, batter'd as he was,
'Trail'd himself up on one knee: then he drew
Her robe to meet his lips, and down she look'd
At the arm'd man sideways, pitying as it seem'd
Or self-involved; but when she learnt his face,
Remembering his ill-omen'd song, arose
Once more thro' all her height, and o'er him grew
Tall as a figure lengthen'd on the sand
When the tide ebbs in sunshine, and he said:

"O fair and strong and terrible! Lioness
That with your long locks play the Lion's mane!
But Love and Nature, these are two more terrible
And stronger. See, your foot is on our necks,
We vanquish'd, you the Victor of your will.
What would you more? give her the child! remain
Orb'd in your isolation: he is dead,
Or all as dead: henceforth we let you be:
Win you the hearts of women; and beware
Lest, where you seek the common love of these,
The common hate with the revolving wheel
Should drag you down, and some great Nemesis
Break from a darken'd future, crown'd with fire,
And tread you out forever: but howsoe'er
Fix'd in yourself, never in your own arms
To hold your own, deny not hers to her,
Give her the child! O if, I say, you keep
One pulse that beats true woman, if you loved
The breast that fed or arm that dandled you,
Or own one port of sense not flint to prayer,
Give her the child! or if you scorn to lay it,
Yourself, in hands so lately claspt with yours,
Or speak to her, your dearest, her one fault
The tenderness, not yours, that could not kill,
Give me it: I will give it her."

He said:
At first her eye with slow dilation roll'd
Dry flame, she listening; after sank and sank
And, into mournful twilight mellowing, dwelt
Full on the child; she took it: "Pretty bud!
Lily of the vale! half open'd bell of the woods!
Sole comfort of my dark hour, when a world
Of traitorous friend and broken system made
No purple in the distance, mystery,
Pledge of a love not to be mine, farewell;
These men are hard upon us as of old,
We two must part: and yet how fain was I
To dream thy cause embraced in mine, to think
I might be something to thee, when I felt
Thy helpless warmth about my barren breast
In the dead prime: but may thy mother prove
As true to thee as false, false, false to me!
And, if thou needs must bear the yoke, I wish it
Gentle as freedom'—here she kiss'd it: then—
"All good go with thee! take it, Sir," and so
Laid the soft babe in his hard-mailed hands,
Who turn'd half-round to Psyche as she sprang
To meet it, with an eye that swum in thanks;
Then felt it sound and whole from head to foot,
And hugg'd and never hugg'd it close enough,
And in her hunger mouth'd and mumbled it,
And hid her bosom with it; after that
Put on more calm and added suppliantly:

"We two were friends: I go to mine own land
Forever: find some other: as for me
I scarce am fit for your great plans: yet speak to me,
Say one soft word and let me part forgiven.'"
But Ida spoke not, rapt upon the child.
Then Arac. "Ida—'sdeath! you blame the man;
You wrong yourselves—the woman is so hard
Upon the woman. Come, a grace to me!
I am your warrior: I and mine have fought
Your battle: kiss her; take her hand, she weeps:
'Sdeath! I would sooner fight thrice o'er than see it."

But Ida spoke not, gazing on the ground,
And reddening in the furrows of his chin,
And moved beyond his custom, Gama said:
"I've heard that there is iron in the blood,
And I believe it. Not one word? not one?

Whence drew you this steel temper? not from me,
Not from your mother, now a saint with saints.
She said you had a heart—I heard her say it—
'Our Ida has a heart'—just ere she died—
'But see that some one with authority

Be near her still' and I—I sought for one—
All people said she had authority—
The Lady Blanche: much profit! Not one word;
No! tho' your father sues: see how you stand
Stiff as Lot's wife, and all the good knights maim'd,

I trust that there is no one hurt to death,
For your wild whim: and was it then for this,
Was it for this we gave our palace up,
Where we withdrew from summer heats and state,
And had our wine and chess beneath the planes,

And many a pleasant hour with her that's gone,
Ere you were born to vex us? Is it kind?
Speak to her I say: is this not she of whom,
When first she came, all flush'd you said to me
Now had you got a friend of your own age,

Now could you share your thought; now should men see
Two women faster welded in one love
Than pairs of wedlock; she you walk'd with, she
You talk'd with, whole nights long, up in the tower,
THE PRINCESS; A MEDLEY

Of line and arc, spheroid and azimuth,
And right ascension, Heaven knows what; and now
A word, but one, one little kindly word,
Not one to spare her: out upon you, flint!
You love nor her, nor me, nor any; nay,
You shame your mother's judgment too. Not one?
You will not? well—no heart have you, or such
As fancies like the vermin in a nut
Have fretted all to dust and bitterness."
So said the small king moved beyond his wont.

But Ida stood nor spoke, drain'd of her force
By many a varying influence and so long.
Down thro' her limbs a drooping languor wept:
Her head a little bent; and on her mouth
A doubtful smile dwelt like a clouded moon
In a still water: then brare out my sire,
Lifting his grim head from my wounds. "O you,
Woman, whom we thought woman even now,
And were half fool'd to let you tend our son,
Because he might have wish'd it—but we see
The accomplice of your madness unforgiven,
And think that you might mix his draught with death,
When your skies change again: the rougher hand
Is safer: on to the tents: take up the Prince."

He rose, and while each ear was prick'd to attend
A tempest, thro' the cloud that dimm'd her broke
A genial warmth and light once more, and shone
Thro' glittering drops on her sad friend.

"Come hither,
O Psyche," she cried out, "embrace me, come,
Quick while I melt; make reconcilement sure
With one that cannot keep her mind an hour:

Come to the hollow heart they slander so!
Kiss and be friends, like children being chid!
I seem no more: I want forgiveness too:
I should have had to do with none but maids,
That have no links with men. Ah false but dear,

Dear traitor, too much lov'd, why?—why?—Yet see,
Before these kings we embrace you yet once more
With all forgiveness, all oblivion,
And trust, not love, you less.

And now, O Sire,
Grant me your son, to nurse, to wait upon him,

Like mine own brother. For my debt to him,
This nightmare weight of gratitude, I know it;
Taunt me no more: yourself and yours shall have
Free adit: we will scatter all our maids
Till happier times each to her proper hearth:

What use to keep them here—now? grant my prayer.
Help, father, brother, help; speak to the king:
Thaw this male nature to some touch of that
Which kills me with myself, and drags me down
From my fixt height to mob me up with all
The soft and milky rabble of womankind,
Poor weakling ev'n as they are.”

Passionate tears

Follow'd: the king replied not: Cyril said:
"Your brother, Lady,—Florian,—ask for him
Of your great Head—for he is wounded too—
That you may tend upon him with the prince."

"Ay so," said Ida with a bitter smile,
"Our laws are broken: let him enter too."

Then Violet, she that sang the mournful song,
And had a cousin tumbled on the plain,
Petition'd too for him. "Ay so," she said,
"I stagger in the stream: I cannot keep
My heart an eddy from the brawling hour:
We break our laws with ease, but let it be."

"Ay so?" said Blanche: "Amazed am I to hear
Your Highness: but your Highness breaks with ease
The law your Highness did not make: 'twas I.
I had been wedded wife, I knew mankind,
And block'd them out; but these men came to woo
Your Highness—verily I think to win."

So she, and turn'd askance a wintry eye:
But Ida with a voice, that like a bell
Toll'd by an earthquake in a trembling tower,
Rang ruin, answer'd full of grief and scorn.

"Fling our doors wide! all, all, not one, but all,
Not only he, but by my mother's soul,
Whatever man lies wounded, friend or foe,
Shall enter, if he will. Let our girls flit,
Till the storm die! but had you stood by us,
The roar that breaks the Pharos from his base
Had left us rock. She fain would sting us too,
But shall not. Pass, and mingle with your likes.
We brook no further insult but are gone.”

She turn’d; the very nape of her white neck
Was rosed with indignation: but the Prince
Her brother came; the king her father charm’d
Her wounded soul with words: nor did mine own
Refuse her proffer, lastly gave his hand.

Then us they lifted up, dead weights, and bare
Straight to the doors: to them the doors gave way
Groaning, and in the Vestal entry shriek’d
The virgin marble under iron heels:
And on they moved and gain’d the hall, and there
Rested: but great the crush was, and each base,
To left and right, of those tall columns drown’d
In silken fluctuation and the swarm
Of female whisperers: at the further end
Was Ida by the throne, the two great cats
Close by her, like supporters on a shield,
Bow-back’d with fear: but in the centre stood
The common men with rolling eyes; amazed
They glared upon the women, and aghast
The women stared at these, all silent, save
When armour clash’d or jingled, while the day,
Descending, struck athwart the hall, and shot
A flying splendour out of brass and steel,
That o'er the statues leapt from head to head,
Now fired an angry Pallas on the helm,
Now set a wrathful Dian's moon on flame,
And now and then an echo started up,
And shuddering fled from room to room, and died
Of fright in far apartments.

Then the voice
Of Ida sounded, issuing ordinance:
And me they bore up the broad stairs, and thro'
The long-laid galleries past a hundred doors
To one deep chamber shut from sound, and due
To languid limbs and sickness; left me in it;
And others otherwhere they laid; and all
That afternoon a sound arose of hoof
And chariot, many a maiden passing home
Till happier times; but some were left of those Held sagest, and the great lords out and in,
From those two hosts that lay beside the walls,
Walk'd at their will, and everything was changed.
PART VII

Ask me no more: the moon may draw the sea;
The cloud may stoop from heaven and take the shape
With fold to fold, of mountain or of cape;
But O too fond, when have I answer'd thee?
    Ask me no more.

Ask me no more: what answer should I give?
    I love not hollow cheek or faded eye:
    Yet, O my friend, I will not have thee die!
Ask me no more, lest I should bid thee live;
    Ask me no more.

Ask me no more: thy fate and mine are seal'd:
    I strove against the stream and all in vain:
    Let the great river take me to the main:
No more, dear love, for at a touch I yield;
    Ask me no more.

So was their sanctuary violated,
So their fair college turn'd to hospital;
At first with all confusion: by and by
Sweet order lived again with other laws:

A kindlier influence reign'd; and everywhere
Low voices with the ministering hand
Hung round the sick: the maidens came, they talk'd,
They sang, they read: till she not fair began
To gather light, and she that was, became

Her former beauty treble; and to and fro
With books, with flowers, with Angel offices,
Like creatures native unto gracious act,
And in their own clear element, they moved.

But sadness on the soul of Ida fell,
And hatred of her weakness, blent with shame.
Old studies fail'd; seldom she spoke: but oft
Clomb to the roofs, and gazed alone for hours
On that disastrous leaguer, swarms of men
Darkening her female field: void was her use,
And she as one that climbs a peak to gaze
O'er land and main, and sees a great black cloud
Drag inward from the deeps, a wall of night,
Blot out the slope of sea from verge to shore,
And suck the blinding splendour from the sand,
And quenching lake by lake and tarn by tarn
Expunge the world: so fared she gazing there;
So blacken'd all her world in secret, blank
And waste it seem'd and vain; till down she came,
And found fair peace once more among the sick.

And twilight dawn'd; and morn by morn the lark
Shot up and shrill'd in flickering gyres, but I
Lay silent in the muffled cage of life:
And twilight gloom'd; and broader-grown the bowers
Drew the great night into themselves, and Heaven,
Star after star, arose and fell; but I,
Deeper than those weird doubts could reach me,
Quite sunder'd from the moving Universe,
Nor knew what eye was on me, nor the hand
That nursed me, more than infants in their sleep.

But Psyche tended Florian: with her oft,
Melissa came; for Blanche had gone, but left
Her child among us, willing she should keep
Court-favour: here and there the small bright head,
A light of healing, glanced about the couch,
Or thro' the parted silks the tender face
Peep'd, shining in upon the wounded man
With blush and smile, a medicine in themselves
To wile the length from languorous hours, and draw
The sting from pain; nor seem'd it strange that soon
He rose up whole, and those fair charities
Join'd at her side; nor stranger seem'd that hearts
So gentle, so employ'd, should close in love,
Than when two dewdrops on the petal shake
To the same sweet air, and tremble deeper down,
And slip at once all-fragrant into one.

Less prosperously the second suit obtain'd
At first with Psyche. Not tho' Blanche had sworn
That after that dark night among the fields
She needs must wed him for her own good name;
Not tho' he built upon the babe restored;
Nor tho' she liked him, yielded she, but fear'd
To incense the Head once more; till on a day
When Cyril pleaded, Ida came behind
Seen but of Psyche: on her foot she hung
A moment, and she heard, at which her face
A little flushed, and she past on; but each
Assumed from thence a half-consent involved
In stillness, plighted troth, and were at peace.

Nor only these: Love in the sacred halls
Held carnival at will, and flying struck
With showers of random sweet on maid and man.
Nor did her father cease to press my claim,
Nor did mine own, now reconciled; nor yet
Did those twin brothers, risen again and whole;
Nor Arac, satiate with his victory.

But I lay still, and with me oft she sat:
Then came a change; for sometimes I would catch
Her hand in wild delirium, gripe it hard,
And fling it like a viper off, and shriek
"You are not Ida;" clasp it once again,
And call her Ida, tho' I knew her not,
And call her sweet, as if in irony,
And call her hard and cold which seem'd a truth:
And still she fear'd that I should lose my mind,
And often she believed that I should die:
Till out of long frustration of her care,
And pensive tendance in the all-weary noons,
And watches in the dead, the dark, when clocks
Throbb'd thunder thro' the palace floors, or call'd
On flying Time from all their silver tongues—
And out of memories of her kindlier days,
And sidelong glances at my father's grief,
And at the happy lovers heart in heart—
And out of hauntings of my spoken love,
And lonely listenings to my mutter'd dream,
And often feeling of the helpless hands,
And wordless broodings on the wasted cheek—
From all a closer interest flourish'd up,
Tenderness touch by touch, and last, to these,
Love, like an Alpine harebell hung with tears
By some cold morning glacier; frail at first
And feeble, all unconscious of itself,
But such as gather'd colour day by day.

Last I woke sane, but well-nigh close to death
For weakness: it was evening: silent light
Slept on the painted walls, wherein were wrought
Two grand designs; for on one side arose
The women up in wild revolt, and storm'd
At the Oppian law. Titanic shapes, they cramm'd
The forum, and half-crush'd among the rest
A dwarf-like Cato cower'd. On the other side
Hortensia spoke against the tax; behind,
A train of dames: by axe and eagle sat,
With all their foreheads drawn in Roman scowls,
And half the wolf's-milk curdled in their veins,
The fierce triumvirs; and before them paused
Hortensia pleading: angry was her face.
THE PRINCESS; A MEDLEY

I saw the forms: I knew not where I was:
They did but look like hollow shows; nor more
Sweet Ida: palm to palm she sat: the dew
Dwelt in her eyes, and softer all her shape
And rounder seem'd: I moved: I sigh'd: a touch
Came round my wrist, and tears upon my hand:
Then all for languor and self-pity ran
Mine down my face, and with what life I had,
And like a flower that cannot all unfold,
So drench'd it is with tempest, to the sun,
Yet, as it may, turns toward him, I on her
Fixt my faint eyes, and utter'd whisperingly:

"If you be, what I think you, some sweet dream,
I would but ask you to fulfil yourself:
But if you be that Ida whom I knew,
I ask you nothing: only, if a dream,
Sweet dream, be perfect. I shall die to-night.
Stoop down and seem to kiss me ere I die."

I could no more, but lay like one in trance,
That hears his burial talk'd of by his friends,
And cannot speak, nor move, nor make one sign,
But lies and dreads his doom. She turn'd; she paused;
She stoop'd; and out of languor leapt a cry;
Leapt fiery Passion from the brinks of death;
And I believed that in the living world
My spirit closed with Ida's at the lips;
Till back I fell, and from mine arms she rose
Glowing all over noble shame; and all
Her falser self slipt from her like a robe,
And left her woman, lovelier in her mood
Than in her mould that other, when she came
From barren deeps to conquer all with love;
And down the streaming crystal dropt; and she
Far-fleeted by the purple island-sides,
Naked, a double light in air and wave,
To meet her Graces, where they deck'd her out
For worship without end; nor end of mine,
Stateliest, for thee! but mute she glided forth,
Nor glanced behind her, and I sank and slept,
Fill'd thro' and thro' with Love, a happy sleep.

Deep in the night I woke: she, near me, heid
A volume of the Poets of her land:
There to herself, all in low tones, she read.

"Now sleeps the crimson petal, now the white;
Nor waves the cypress in the palace walk;
Nor winks the gold fin in the porphyry font:
The fire-fly wakens: waken thou with me.

Now droops the milk-white peacock like a ghost,
And like a ghost she glimmers on to me.

Now lies the Earth all Danaë to the stars,
And all thy heart lies open unto me.

Now slides the silent meteor on, and leaves
A shining furrow, as thy thoughts in me.

Now folds the lily all her sweetness up
And slips into the bosom of the lake:
So fold thyself, my dearest, thou, and slip
Into my bosom and be lost in me.''

I heard her turn the page; she found a small
Sweet Idyl, and once more, as low, she read:

"Come down, O maid, from yonder mountain height:
What pleasure lives in height (the shepherd sang)
In height and cold, the splendour of the hills?
But cease to move so near the Heavens, and cease
To glide a sunbeam by the blasted Pine,
To sit a star upon the sparkling spire;
And come, for Love is of the valley, come,
For Love is of the valley, come thou down
And find him; by the happy threshold, he,
Or hand in hand with Plenty in the maize,
Or red with spirited purple of the vats,
Or foxlike in the vine; nor cares to walk
With Death and Morning on the silver horns,
Nor wilt thou snare him in the white ravine,
Nor find him dropt upon the firths of ice,
That huddling slant in furrow-cloven falls
To roll the torrent out of dusky doors.
But follow; let the torrent dance thee down
To find him in the valley; let the wild
Lean-headed Eagles yelp alone, and leave
The monstrous ledges there to slope, and spill
Their thousand wreaths of dangling water-smoke,
That like a broken purpose waste in air
So waste not thou; but come; for all the vales
Await thee; azure pillars of the hearth
Arise to thee; the children call, and I
Thy shepherd pipe, and sweet is every sound,
Sweeter thy voice, but every sound is sweet;
Myriads of rivulets hurrying thro' the lawn,
The moan of doves in immemorial elms,
And murmuring of innumerable bees."
So she low-toned; while with shut eyes I lay
Listening; then look'd. Pale was the perfect face;

The bosom with long sighs labour'd; and meek
Seem'd the full lips, and mild the luminous eyes,
And the voice trembled and the hand. She said
Brokenly, that she knew it, she had fail'd
In sweet humility; had fail'd in all;
That all her labour was but as a block
Left in the quarry; but she still were loth,
She still were loth to yield herself to one
That wholly scorn'd to help their equal rights
Against the sons of men, and barbarous laws.

She pray'd me not to judge their cause from her
That wrong'd it, sought far less for truth than power
In knowledge: something wild within her breast,
A greater than all knowledge, beat her down.
And she had nursed me there from week to week:

Much had she learnt in little time. In part
It was ill counsel had misled the girl
To vex true hearts: yet was she but a girl—
"Ah fool, and made myself a Queen of farce!
When comes another such? never, I think,
Till the Sun drop, dead, from the signs."

Her voice
Choked, and her forehead sank upon her hands,
And her great heart thro' all the faultful Past
Went sorrowing in a pause I dared not break;
Till notice of a change in the dark world
Was lispt about the acacias, and a bird,
That early woke to feed her little ones,
Sent from a dewy breast a cry for light:
She moved, and at her feet the volume fell.

"Blame not thyself too much," I said, "nor blame
Too much the sons of men and barbarous laws;
These were the rough ways of the world till now.
Henceforth thou hast a helper, me, that know
The woman's cause is man's: they rise or sink
Together, dwarf'd or godlike, bond or free:
For she that out of Lethe scales with man
The shining steps of Nature, shares with man.
His nights, his days, moves with him to one goal,
Stays all the fair young planet in her hands—
If she be small, slight-natured, miserable,
How shall men grow? but work no more alone!
Our place is much: as far as in us lies
We two will serve them both in aiding her—
Will clear away the parasitic forms
That seem to keep her up but drag her down—
Will leave her space to burgeon out of all
Within her—let her make herself her own
To give or keep, to live and learn and be
All that not harms distinctive womanhood.
For woman is not undeveloped man,
But diverse: could we make her as the man,
Sweet Love were slain: his dearest bond is this,
Not like to like, but like in difference.
Yet in the long years liker must they grow;
The man be more of woman, she of man,
He gain in sweetness and in moral height,
Nor lose the wrestling thews that throw the world;
She mental breadth, nor fail in childward care,
Nor lose the childlike in the larger mind;
Till at the last she set herself to man,
Like perfect music unto noble words;
And so these twain, upon the skirts of Time,
Sit side by side, full-summ’d in all their powers,
Dispensing harvest, sowing the To-be,
Self-reverent each and reverencing each,
Distinct in individualities,
But like each other ev’n as those who love.
Then comes the statelier Eden back to men:
Then reign the world’s great bridals, chaste and calm:
Then springs the crowning race of humankind.
May these things be!”
Sighing she spoke “I fear they will not.”
“Dear, but let us type them now
In our own lives, and this proud watchword rest
Of equal; seeing either sex alone
Is half itself, and in true marriage lies
Nor equal, nor unequal: each fulfils
Defect in each, and always thought in thought,
Purpose in purpose, will in will, they grow,
The single pure and perfect animal,
THE PRINCESS; A MEDLEY

The two-cell'd heart beating, with one full stroke, Life."

And again sighing she spoke: "A dream
That once was mine! what woman taught you this?"

"Alone," I said, "from earlier than I know,
Immersed in rich foreshadowings of the world,
I loved the woman: he, that doth not, lives
A drowning life, besotted in sweet self,
Or pines in sad experience worse than death,
Or keeps his wing'd affections clipt with crime:
Yet was there one thro' whom I loved her, one
Not learned, save in gracious household ways,
Not perfect, nay, but full of tender wants,
No Angel, but a dearer being, all dipt
In Angel instincts, breathing Paradise,
Interpreter between the Gods and men,
Who look'd all native to her place, and yet
On tiptoe seem'd to touch upon a sphere
Too gross to tread, and all male minds perforce
Sway'd to her from their orbits as they moved,
And girdled her with music. Happy he
With such a mother! faith in womankind
Beats with his blood, and trust in all things high
Comes easy to him, and tho' he trip and fall
He shall not blind his soul with clay."

"But I,"

Said Ida, tremulously, "so all unlike—
It seems you love to cheat yourself with words:
This mother is your model. I have heard
Of your strange doubts: they well might be: I seem
A mockery to my own self. Never, Prince;
You cannot love me.’’

“Nay but thee,’’ I said,
“From yearlong poring on thy pictured eyes,

Ere seen I loved, and loved thee seen, and saw
Thee woman thro’ the crust of iron moods
That mask’d thee from men’s reverence up, and forced

Sweet love on pranks of saucy boyhood: now,
Giv’n back to life, to life indeed, thro’ thee,

Indeed I love: the new day comes, the light
Dearer for night, as dearer thou for faults
Lived over: lift thine eyes; my doubts are dead,
My haunting sense of hollow shows: the change,
This truthful change in thee has kill’d it. Dear,

Look up, and let thy nature strike on mine,
Like yonder morning on the blind half-world;
Approach and fear not; breathe upon my brows;
In that fine air I tremble, all the past
Melts mist-like into this bright hour, and this

Is morn to more, and all the rich to-come
Reels, as the golden Autumn woodland reels
Athwart the smoke of burning weeds. Forgive me,
I waste my heart in signs: let be. My bride,
My wife, my life. O we will walk this world,

Yoked in all exercise of noble end,
And so thro' those dark gates across the wild
That no man knows. Indeed I love thee: come,
Yield thyself up: my hopes and thine are one:
Accomplish thou my manhood and thyself;
Lay thy sweet hands in mine and trust to me."

345
CONCLUSION

So closed our tale, of which I give you all
The random scheme as wildly as it rose:
The words are mostly mine; for when we ceased
There came a minute's pause, and Walter said,
"I wish she had not yielded!" then to me,
"What, if you dressed it up poetically!"
So pray'd the men, the women: I gave assent:
Yet how to bind the scattered scheme of seven
Together in one sheaf? What style could suit?
The men required that I should give throughout
The sort of mock-heroic gigantesque,
With which we banter'd little Lilia first:
The women—and perhaps they felt their power,
For something in the ballads which they sang,
Or in their silent influence as they sat,
Had ever seem'd to wrestle with burlesque,
And drove us, last, to quite a solemn close—
They hated banter, wish'd for something real,
A gallant fight, a noble princess—why
Not make her true-heroic—true-sublime?
Or all, they said, as earnest as the close?
Which yet with such a framework scarce could be.
Then rose a little feud betwixt the two,
Bettwixt the mockers and the realists:
And I, betwixt them both, to please them both,
And yet to give the story as it rose,
I moved as in a strange diagonal,
And maybe neither pleased myself nor them.

But Lilia pleased me, for she took no part
In our dispute: the sequel of the tale
Had touch'd her; and she sat, she pluck'd the grass,
She flung it from her, thinking: last, she fixt
A showery glance upon her aunt, and said,
"You—tell us what we are,"' who might have told,
For she was cram'd with theories out of books,
But that there rose a shout: the gates were closed
At sunset, and the crowd were swarming now,
To take their leave, about the garden rails.

So I and some went out to these: we climb'd
The slope to Vivian-place, and turning saw
The happy valleys, half in light, and half
Far-shadowing from the west, a land of peace;
Gray halls alone among their massive groves;
Trim hamlets; here and there a rustic tower
Half-lost in belts of hop and breadths of wheat;
The shimmering glimpses of a stream; the seas;
A red sail, or a white; and far beyond,
Imagined more than seen, the skirts of France.

"Look there, a garden!" said my college friend,
The Tory member's elder son, "and there!"
CONCLUSION

God bless the narrow sea which keeps her off,
And keeps our Britain, whole within herself,
A nation yet, the rulers and the ruled—
Some sense of duty, something of a faith,

Some reverence for the laws ourselves have made
Some patient force to change them when we will,
Some civic manhood firm against the crowd—
But yonder, whiff! there comes a sudden heat,
The gravest citizen seems to lose his head,

The king is scared, the soldier will not fight,
The little boys begin to shoot and stab,
A kingdom topples over with a shriek
Like an old woman, and down rolls the world
In mock heroics stranger than our own;

Revolts, republics, revolutions, most
No graver than a schoolboys' barring out;
Too comic for the solemn things they are,
Too solemn for the comic touches in them,
Like our wild Princess with as wise a dream

As some of theirs—God bless the narrow seas!
I wish they were a whole Atlantic broad.’’

“Have patience,’’ I replied, “ourselves are full
Of social wrong; and maybe wildest dreams
Are but the needful preludes of the truth:

For me, the genial day, the happy crowd,
The sport half-science, fill me with a faith.
This fine old world of ours is but a child
Yet in the go-cart. Patience! Give it time
To learn its limbs: there is a hand that guides.’’
In such discourse we gain'd the garden rails, 80
And there we saw Sir Walter where he stood,
Before a tower of crimson holly-oaks,
Among six boys, head under head, and look'd
No little lily-handed Baronet he,
A great broad-shoulder'd genial Englishman, 85
A lord of fat prize-oxen and of sheep,
A raiser of huge melons and of pine,
A patron of some thirty charities,
A pamphleteer on guano and on grain,
A quarter-sessions chairman, abler none;
Fair-hair'd and redder than a windy morn;
Now shaking hands with him, now him, of those
That stood the nearest—now address'd to speech—
Who spoke few words and pithy, such as closed
Welcome, farewell, and welcome for the year 90
To follow: a shout rose again, and made
The long line of the approaching rookery swerve
From the elms, and shook the branches of the deer
From slope to slope thro' distant ferns, and rang
Beyond the bourn of sunset; O, a shout
More joyful than the city-roar that hails
Premier or king! Why should not these great Sirs
Give up their parks some dozen times a year
To let the people breathe? So thrice they cried,
I likewise, and in groups they stream'd away. 100

But we went back to the Abbey, and sat on,
So much the gathering darkness charm'd: we sat
But spoke not, rapt in nameless reverie,
Perchance upon the future man: the walls

110 Blacken'd about us, bats wheel'd, and owls whoop'd,
And gradually the powers of the night,
That range above the region of the wind,
Deepening the courts of twilight broke them up
Thro' all the silent spaces of the worlds,

115 Beyond all thought into the Heaven of Heavens.

Last little Lilia, rising quietly,
Disrobed the glimmering statue of Sir Ralph
From those rich silks, and home well-pleased we went.
LIFE OF TENNYSON

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1809</td>
<td>Born, August 6, at Somersby in Lincolnshire.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1811</td>
<td>Arthur Hallam born.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1816-20</td>
<td>Tennyson at Louth Grammar School.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1827</td>
<td>Published, with his brother Charles, Poems by Two Brothers.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1829</td>
<td>Won the Chancellor's Prize in poetry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1830</td>
<td>Poems, Chiefly Lyrical. Journey to the Pyrenees, with Arthur Hallam.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1831</td>
<td>Left Cambridge. Tennyson's father died.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1832</td>
<td>Poems.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1833</td>
<td>Death of Arthur Hallam, September 13.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1842</td>
<td>Poems.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1845</td>
<td>Received a pension, £200, from the Crown.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1847</td>
<td>The Princess.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1850</td>
<td>Made Poet Laureate. In Memoriam. Married Emily Sellwood. Went to live at Twickenham.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1853</td>
<td>Settled at Farringford, Isle of Wight.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1854</td>
<td>Charge of the Light Brigade. Lionel Tennyson born.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1859</td>
<td>[Four] Idylls of the King. Journey to Portugal.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1861</td>
<td>Second journey to the Pyrenees.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1864</td>
<td>Enoch Arden.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1865</td>
<td>Refused a baronetcy.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
VERSIFICATION

To obtain the present richness and variety of verse in The Princess, Tennyson took great pains in the construction. Of the many rhythmical and metrical expedients he adopted, the following examples (based upon Professor James Hadley's study of the poem, in his Essays, Philological and Critical) are among the most characteristic. We find:

I. "The so-called elision—more truly, the blending of a final vowel with the vowel initial of a following word into a single syllable, or at least what passes for such in the rhythm."

"I would the old God of war himself were dead."

"A bird's-eye view of all the ungracious past."
"O Swallow, Swallow, if I could follow and light
Upon her lattice."

II. The same blending often occurs where the second word begins with a weak consonant.

"Fly to her, and pipe and woo her, and make her mine."

"Whichever side be Victor, in the halloo
Will topple to the trumpet down."

III. So, too, in a single word, two syllables often count as one in the rhythm.

"Some crying there was an army in the land."

"And highest among the statues, statue-like."

IV. In the, of the, etc., are often treated as filling only one rhythmical place.

"Better have died, and spilt our bones in the flood."

"With the air of the trumpet round him, and leaps in."

V. Often a short syllable (especially if, as in the second example below, it be final, and followed by an initial vowel) is not given a place by itself in the metre. The following italicized words are treated as dissyllables:

"The general foe. More soluble is this knot."

"Some palace in our own land, where you shall reign."

VI. There are many passages of irregular rhythm, in which the sound is admirably suited to the sense.

"And in the blast and bray of the long horn
And serpent-throated bugle, undulated
The banner."

"Palpitated, her hand shook, and we heard
In the dead hush the papers that she held Rustle."
NOTES

In these notes many of the more obvious allusions to historical, classical, and Biblical persons, events, or places, are not explained.

ABBREVIATIONS

Dawson, Mr. S. E. Dawson's Study of The Princess (second edition, Montreal, 1884).

PROLOGUE.

"The shepherds on the lawn . . .
Sat simply chatting in a rustic row."

5. Institute. The People's Institute for the education of the laboring classes.

20. Laborious orient ivory. Chinese balls, carved, one inside another, out of the solid block. The line is famous for the art with which the sound is adapted to the sense.

21. Crease, or kris. A heavy dagger with a wavy blade.

90. Satiated. "We need to remember, in reading British verse, that the secondary accent which we give to so many words of four or five syllables is almost unknown in England." (Boynton.)

113. The Proctor's dogs. The Proctors are subordinate officers of discipline. They are attended by servants, a kind of University police, called "bull-dogs" by the students.

161. Lost their weeks. Because of absence from the college, they were unable to count the term as one of the nine terms of actual residence which candidates for the bachelor's degree at Cambridge must pass.

199. Solecisms. Here the word means "things out of the ordinary; extravagances."

I.

5-21. These lines, like all the others dealing with the "weird seizures," were added in the fourth edition.

19. Court-Galen. Galen, a famous physician, lived in the second century, A. D.

27. Pedant's. Pedagogue's.

33. Proxy-wedded, etc. In some cases of marriage by proxy, the representative of the bridegroom stripped his leg to the knee, as part of the ceremony. In the present instance, as the Princess points out (V. 388-390), the parties to the contract were too young to give consent, and the marriage was therefore invalid. "At eight years old," she could have gone through a ceremony only of very formal betrothal.

65. Cook'd his spleen. Smothered his anger. Cf. the figurative use of coquere in Plautus, Livy, Cicero, and other Latin writers.

109. Tilth and grange. Tilled ground and farm-buildings.

110. Blowing bosks of wilderness. Thickets that have run wild, and are blossoming with flowers.

111. Mother-city. Metropolis.

116. Without a star. King Gama does not wear the decorations of any order.

170. The liberties. The outlying grounds of the Princess's University.

239. Uranian Venus. The "heavenly" or spiritual Aphrodite of Plato's Symposium.

244. On this line the poet, in a letter to Mr. S. E. Dawson, has made an interesting comment:
"There was a period in my life when, as an artist, Turner for instance, takes rough sketches of landscape, etc., in order to work them eventually into some great picture, so I was in the habit of chronicling, in four or five words or more, whatever might strike me as picturesque in nature. I never put these down, and many and many a line has gone away on the north wind, but some remain, e.g.:

"A full sea glazed with muffled moonlight. Suggestion: The sea one night at Torquay, when Torquay was the most lovely sea-village in England, tho' now a smoky town. The sky was covered with thin vapor, and the moon was behind it." (Dawson, pp. ix. and x.)

SONG.

"I may tell you," said Tennyson, in the letter quoted just above, "that the songs were not an after-thought. Before the first edition came out I deliberated with myself whether I should put songs in between the separate divisions of the poem: Again, I thought, the poem will explain itself; but the public did not see that [Psyche's] child, as you say, was the heroine of the piece, and at last I conquered my laziness, and inserted them."

The songs first appeared in the third edition, 1850.

8, 9. That sang all round with laurel. Rolfe explains this as meaning "haunted by birds and bees." To Boynton the suggestion of Hallam Tennyson seems more reasonable, "that the poet had in mind simply the rustling of the laurel-leaves in the wind."

60. The boards. The register of undergraduates.

64, 65. She that taught the Sabine. The nymph Egeria, who by her counsels helped Numa Pompilius (Sabine by birth, and second king of Rome) to give wise laws.

66. The foundress of the Babylonian wall. Semiramis.

67. The Carian Artemisia. The Carian queen who fought on the side of Xerxes at Salamis,—not she who built the Mausoleum.

87. Forms. The English name for long benches such as are used in schools.

97. The dame. The wife of Midas. According to some poets, it was she who could not keep the secret.

112. Appraised. "Praised, approved; a rare use of the word" (Rolfe). The Lycian custom. By the account of Herodotus, the Lycians took their family names from their mothers, and traced their descent through the maternal ancestry.

113. That lay, etc. The Etruscan women, who were admitted to banquets.

144. Verulam. Lord Bacon.

"Lap me in soft Lydian airs."

See also R. Barnefield, The Nightingale. (Golden Treasury, ed. 1894, p. 28):

"King Pandion, he is dead.
All thy friends are lapped in lead."

166. Parted. Departed. In this sense Mistress Quickly uses the word, when she tells of Falstaff's death:

"A' parted even just between twelve and one, even at the turning o' the tide."

Cf. also Gray's Elegy, I.: "the knell of parting day."

As often happens in proverbs, the older meaning is preserved in the maxim: "Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest."

188. Grange. Here used for "granary."

319. Danaïd. Danaïs, a mythical king, commanded his fifty daughters (the Danaïdes) to kill their husbands. All but one daughter, Hypermnestra, obeyed. The forty-nine guilty Danaïds were punished in the lower world by being condemned forever to draw water in leaky vessels.
420. A striean age. After the Iron Age was come, the gods lived no more among men. Astraea, Goddess of Justice, was the last of the deities to depart; and it was said that whenever the Golden Age should return, she would be the first to appear again on earth.

III.

90. Sphere. The upper air.
99. Samian Herè. The island of Samos was a favorite seat of Hera (Juno).
100. Memnon. The Egyptian statue which gave forth musical sounds at sunrise.
111. Prime. Primeval.
120. Fabled nothing fair. Invented no plausible story.
153, 154. Take the dip of certain strata. Measure their inclination to the horizon.
179. Retinue. The word is here accented on the second syllable.
212. Vashti. See the book of Esther, i. 12.
246. The one Pou Sto. From the famous saying of Archimedes, δός μοι ποῦ στῶ, καὶ κινῶ τὴν γῆν.—(Pappus Alexandrinus, Collectio, VIII., 11, 10.) "Give me a place to stand on, and I will move the world."
280-282. Dare we dream, etc. Dare we dream that the Creator is a mere workman who gains in skill by practice?
285. Diotima. A wise woman of Mantinea, who is said to have instructed Socrates.
331. Fair Corinna's triumph. This was over Pindar, "the bearded Victor of ten thousand hymns." Pausanias, who saw her portrait, says (IX. 22.3) that her beauty, and the more familiar dialect in which she sang, had something to do with the decision of the judges.

SONG.

This song, it is said, was suggested by the bugle-music of the boatmen on Lake Killarney.

21-40. "One of my family," is the comment of Mrs. Anne Thackeray Ritchie, "remembers hearing Tennyson say that 'Tears, idle tears' was suggested by Tintern Abbey."

59. Ker. Dry stalks of hemlock; here used for any wild growth.

60, 61. The beard-blown goat hang on the shaft. That is, "though the goat, his beard blowing in the wind, stand precariously on the ruined pillar."

100, 101. Like the Ithacensian suitors, etc. The suitors of Penelope failed to recognize Ulysses in his disguise; and they laughed strangely, without knowing why. With alien lips is a translation of the Greek, "with other men's jaws."

See the Odyssey, XX. 347.

104. Bulbul. "The Persian name of the nightingale, whose love for the rose is a favorite theme with Saadi and his brother poets. Gulistan is Persian for rose-garden, and Saadi takes it as the title of his book of poems."

(Rolfe.)

185. The hunter. Actæon, who came upon Diana and her nymphs bathing, was turned into a stag.

194. The Bear. The constellation Ursa Major, with its seven slow suns, the seven stars of the "Dipper."

Cf. Milton (Il Penseroso, lines 85-87):

"Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft outwatch the Bear."

The constellations and their movements seem to have attracted Tennyson greatly.

207. Judith. See the book of Judith in the Apocrypha.

236. But as the waterlily, etc. Tennyson, in his letter to Dawson, said that the figure was suggested by—"Waterlilies in my own pond, seen on a gusty day with my own eyes. They did slide and start in the sudden puffs of wind, till caught and stayed by the tether of their own stalks."

255. The mystic fire. The electrical phenomenon, St Elmo's fire, or corporant.

275. Castalies. Fountain-heads of poetry. Castalia, or Castaly, the fountain on Parnassus, was sacred to the Muses.

366. When the wild peasant, etc. The poet had in mind the "rick-fire days," some years before this poem was written, when the working people made so much trouble among English homesteads.

418. Cassiopeia. The Ethiopian queen, who became a constellation.

419. Persephone. Proserpina, whom Pluto carried down to Hades and made his queen.

422. Frequency. Throng.

426. Landship, the earlier form of landscape, is always used by Tennyson, in both poetry and prose.

427. Dwarfs of presage. The Prince means that the famous people and places, when once seen, fell far below what he had been led to expect; that they were belittled by the greatness of their reputation.

436. The seal does music. "A flute will sometimes attract [seals] to a boat; and the ringing of the church bell at Hoy, in Orkney, has often caused the appearance of numerous seals in the little bay." (Rolfe.)

V.

250. The airy Giant. Orion.

284. Her that talked down the fifty wisest men. St. Catherine of Alexandria, the daughter of King Costis and Sabinella, queen of Egypt, converted to Christianity the fifty wise men whom the Emperor Maximianus sent to dispute with her.

355. Tomyris. Queen of the Massagetae, defeated Cyrus the Great, 529 B.C. Having found the king's body among the slain, she took the head, dipped it in a skin of blood, and bade him drink his fill. Herodotus I. 214.

367. Lands. Russia in the seventeenth century.
488. Two bulks. His two brothers.
491. Mêlée. Confused fight. (French mêlée.)

VI.

47. Blanch'd. Propitious. Cf. the use of the Latin albus in this sense.
48. The golden year. The coming golden age.

"O Attic shape! Fair attitude, with brede
Of marble men and maidens overwrought."

126. On tremble. This is, as has been noted, an early English form. On and a- were used interchangeably. See Acts xiii. 36. "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep." Even now we say sometimes on board, sometimes aboard.

166. Port. Portal.
186. Prime here means the dead hours before dawn.
283. Adit. Access, or entrance.
319. The Pharos, one of the seven wonders of the world, was a lighthouse at the entrance to the harbor of Alexandria.
338. Supporters. In heraldry, they are the figures standing at either side of a coat of arms.
355. Due. Devoted.

VII.

19. Void was her use. Her life was empty of its usual occupations.
109. The Oppian law, enacted at Rome (215 B.C.) when Hannibal was approaching the city, forbade any woman to wear gay-colored robes, to be adorned with more than half an ounce of gold, or to drive in a chariot. After the war (in Cato's consulate, 195 B.C.), the women rose, crowded the forum, and had the law repealed.

112. Hortensia, a Roman matron, daughter of the orator Hortensius, spoke successfully against a tax imposed on women during the second triumvirate, 44 B.C.

148. That other. Aphrodite rising from the sea. Far-fleeted—three lines below—is possibly a reminiscence of Chaucer's Venus "fleeting" (i.e., floating) "in the large sea." (Knightes Tale, line 1098.)

189. "With Death and Morning on the silver horns." Morning walks on the mountain peaks, and Death is her companion, because Life has no home on those summits, or must face Death in attempting to scale them. This is Rolfe's explanation, approved by the poet himself.

230. From the signs of the Zodiac.

CONCLUSION

58. Yonder. In France.

70. The narrow seas. The Straits of Dover.

94. Closed. Included.
APPENDIX

(Adapted, and enlarged, from the Manual for the Study of English Classics, by George L. Marsh)

HELPS TO STUDY

TENNYSON

When and where was Tennyson born?

What was his father's occupation? What were the natural surroundings of his youth (pp. 9, 10)?

What university did he attend? Who were some of his more important friends there? Did he take a degree?

When did his first notable poetical work appear?

What personal loss had a great effect on his poetical genius? What long poem ultimately resulted from this loss?

To what position was Tennyson appointed in 1850?

Name and characterize briefly the most important of his longer poems (pp. 14-17). His dramas.

What title did he receive late in life?

When did he die?

What is the substance of Saintsbury's estimate of Tennyson's position among the poets of his period (quoted on p. 18)?

THE PRINCESS-IN GENERAL

When was The Princess published (p. 13)?

What two works may have furnished Tennyson with hints for this poem (pp. 20, 21)? What extent of borrowing seems probable?

Summarize what Tennyson's son has to say about The Princess (pp. 27, 28).
State in outline the general plan of the poem—the machinery of its structure. Do you find it confusing?

Why did Tennyson call the poem a Medley (p. 25 and conclusion of the poem)?

What is the function of the child (p. 26)? Compare with Silas Marner.

Is the final effect serious or burlesque?

What apparent change do you note, as the poem progresses, in the poet's attitude towards woman?

Point out the best examples you find of the characteristic qualities of Tennyson mentioned on page 29; namely: (1) "music . . . in words and cadences"; (2) "truth and beauty of descriptions of nature"; (3) "sympathy . . . with movements of the time."

The Princess—in Detail

Prologue. How early in the poem is its principal theme hinted at (p. 34)?

How soon is its nature as a medley foreshadowed (p. 33)? By what various contrasts are the characteristics of a medley made prominent (p. 36, etc.)?

How much of the main plot is foreshadowed in the Prologue (p. 38, etc.)?

Why is the account of scientific experiments given (p. 35)?

I. Explain what is meant by the "weird seizures."

What is the purpose of introducing them (p. 28)? Note every use made of them in the progress of the poem.

What significance for the future has the seal described near the end of Part I?

II. What interest does the Princess show in the Prince (p. 52)? Trace through the poem the steps in the growth of her interest.

How soon is the child introduced? How is it made prominent?
What scientific theory is given poetical setting in this part?

How is Cyril's attitude toward Psyche indicated from the first?

What reference seems to change Psyche's intention regarding her brother and his friends (p. 60)?

What hints are given as to danger from Lady Blanche?

III. Summarize in order the means by which Cyril successively tries to secure the silence of the Lady Blanche.

What scientific practice is protested against (p. 79)?

IV. How is the sex of the intruders discovered by the Princess?

What reason does the Lady Blanche assign for not telling about them?

Is there any significance in the Princess's determination to keep Psyche's child (p. 95)?

What justification do you find for the Princess's bitterly sarcastic speech (p. 101)?

V. What request is there as to the Prince in the Princess's letter to her brother (p. 120)? What important comment on the child?

Note the rapidity and vigor of the account of the combat. Paraphrase it.

VI. Is the Princess's battle song in harmony with her character as generally presented?

Point out the silent part the child plays in the Princess's work of mercy after the combat (ll. 58, 75, etc.).

What effect has the sight of the Princess's father on the Princess?

What incident of great dramatic power follows Psyche's sight of her child?

Why are so many appeals necessary before the Princess forgives Psyche?

VII. Is there in this part any element of the burlesque? Is Tennyson expressing his own sincere opinion?
Conclusion. Has the conclusion a bearing on the story, either as explanation or in any other capacity?

The Songs. What does the song at the beginning of Part II indicate as to the child as a reconciling influence?

What is the purpose of the lullaby at the beginning of Part III?

What bearing has the "Bugle Song" (beginning of Part IV) on the main part of the poem?

What bearing has the song "Tears, Idle Tears"? The "Swallow Song"?

Who is it whose "voice is heard thro' rolling drums" (Interlude, p. 103)?

Show wherein the song at the beginning of Part VI intensifies the effect of the previous songs.

What is the cumulative meaning of the songs in VII?

Characterization

Do you find an effort to secure very definite characterization? In what cases is it most successful?

Point out some of the best attempts to make the dialogue suit the character speaking.

Is the Prince a weak character? Where does he appear strongest? Does his character develop? If so, point out the stages in its development.

Versification and Style

What is the metrical form of this poem?

Point out several groups of lines which seem to justify the statement of Tennyson quoted at the bottom of page 28.

Find good examples of each of the variations in meter described on pages 159, 160.

What can you say as to the amount of figurative language in the poem? Note the frequency of figures from the sea. Pick out a number of the most effective figures you find. Any that do not seem to you effective.
THEME SUBJECTS

1. Tennyson's life (pp. 9-18).
2. Carlyle and Tennyson (description or conversation, on the basis of Carlyle's comment, quoted on p. 12).
3. Sources of The Princess (pp. 19-23).
4. The plan of the poem—the machinery of its structure, as outlined in the Prologue.
5. The Princess as a "medley"—why a "medley"? (Note the change from burlesque to serious.)
7. The "weird seizures"—what they are and their significance when they occur.
8. The use of science in the poem.
9. A study of the songs—their meaning in their respective places.
10. Narratives as follows:
   The story of the Prince and the Princess.
   The story of Cyril and Psyche.
   The story of Florian and Melissa.
   The story of the two Kings.
   The combat.

11. Character sketches of the Prince, the Princess, the two Kings, the Ladies Blanche and Psyche, Cyril, Florian, Arac, and Melissa.
12. A woman's college of today (showing differences from that in The Princess).
13. Tennyson's view of "the woman question." (Cf. Ruskin's, as shown in Sesame and Lilies.)
15. The development of the feeling of the Princess toward the Prince.
16. Discuss the qualities of Tennyson's poetry—music, sympathy, etc., as mentioned on page 29. Give examples.
APPENDIX

SELECTIONS FOR CLASS READING

1. All the songs.
2. King Gama gives little encouragement (pp. 46, 47).
3. Psyche's lecture (pp. 55-57).
4. The plea to Psyche (pp. 59-61).
5. The Prince's opinion of the Princess (pp. 71, 72).
6. Cyril's mission (pp. 72-74).
7. The Princess defends her course (pp. 76-78).
8. The discovery (pp. 87-89).
9. Blanche's speech of accusation (pp. 92-95).
10. The Prince's defense (pp. 97-99).
11. The Princess answers him (pp. 101, 102).
12. Psyche's lament (pp. 107-9).
14. Ida's letter to her brother (pp. 118-21).
15. The combat (pp. 122-24).
16. Psyche seeks her child (pp. 129-32).
17. The Princess weakens (pp. 134-37).
18. The Prince's convalescence (pp. 140-43).
19. The Princess yields (pp. 144, 145).
20. The Prince's ideal of womanhood (pp. 148-52).
Deacidified using the Bookkeeper process.
Neutralizing agent: Magnesium Oxide
Treatment Date: May 2009

Preservation Technologies
A WORLD LEADER IN COLLECTIONS PRESERVATION
111 Thomson Park Drive
Cranberry Township, PA 16066